Cease-Fire Effective In Mideast

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Guns fell silent along the Suez Canal for the first time in 17 months today, the first day of a cease-fire that United Nations Secretary General Thant hailed as a step toward Middle East peace.

Israel said Arab guerrillas broke the calm twice, however, in the opening hours of the 90-day truce.

An Israeli military spokesman said Arab guerrillas sabotaged a section of railroad line in the Gaza Strip early today and also fired several rockets into Israel from Jordan.

Israel has warned it may retaliate if any of its Arab neighbors break the cease-fire, but there was no report of any Israeli response to the two incidents today. They were the first reported breaks in the truce on any Middle East front.

Palestinian guerrilla groups have vowed not to observe the cease-fire.

The Israeli spokesman said a 400-yard section of railroad was sabotaged near the Gaza Strip village of Khan Yunis. Several rockets arched in from Jordan a few hours later near the Biblical city of Sodom. The rockets caused no damage and Israeli forces in the area did not return the fire, the spokesman said.

The truce cleared the way for the second phase of the proposal offered by Secretary of State William P. Rogers June 19. Rogers suggested indirect talks between Israel, Egypt and Jordan overseen by Gunnar V. Jarring, the U.N. Middle East peace mediator.

At the United Nations, Thant said, "this marks, in my view, an important step forward in the search for peace in the Middle East. It is a beginning, a welcome first step."

Israeli Premier Golda Meir went on radio and television to pledge her country would maintain the truce "meticulously in all their provisions on the basis of reciprocity."

She cautioned her people against over-optimism.

"With all our profond desire that the cease-fire—and not only on this front alone—should be the first step toward peace, we must remember that our road to peace is a long and hard one," Mrs. Meir said.

Defense Minister Moshe Dayan said, "If violations are committed against us, we shall have to decide in accordance with those violations whether to lodge a complaint about them or to tell the other side: 'if you shoot, we shall also do so'."

Informed political sources said Israeli and Egyptian jets would carry out air inspections of each others front line areas without actually crossing the canal in order to keep other surveillance.

In Cairo, the Egyption Foreign Ministry announced the cease-fire and said, "the arrangements which were reached after extensive consultations are considered to be acceptable from the United Arab Republic's viewpoint."

The announcement said Egypt had agreed to the freeze on arms buildups along the canal as a condition of the truce.

Arab guerrilla leaders denounced the cease-fire and said they would go on fighting.

The Action organization for the Liberation of Palestine said, "We shall not abide by the cease-fire. We shall violate it with all our strength."

Link To Soledad Brothers Race Issue Undetermined

Yesterday's murderous shoot-out at the Marin County Hall of Justice obviously was plotted in advance. But, authorities still aren't sure — or aren't saying — whether the getaway try that cost four lives can be linked to racial demands to "free the Soledad brothers" or to other militant schemes.

(See other stories and pictures, pages 2, 3, 4, 8 and 21.)

Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley, 65, was shot to death while being held captive by a teen-ager and three San Quentin convicts. Also killed in a shoot-out that brought near-panic among many of the more than 2,000 persons in the Civic Center shortly after 11 a.m. yesterday were:

James D. McClain, 37, San Quentin inmate being tried in Haley's court on a charge of assaulting a San Quentin guard and apparent leader of the gang.

Jonathan P. Jackson, 17, of Pasadena, the outsider who brought weapons into Haley's courtroom that sparked the violence.

William Arthur Christmas, 27, San Quentin inmate who was a witness in McClain's trial.

Another convict and one of the band's hostages was wounded and two other hostages treated for shock.

Still in critical condition today at Marin General Hospital is Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas, the hostage who is said to have grabbed a gun from one of his captors inside the van and shot two or three of them. He was hit by three bullets, and suffered a severed spinal cord, a tear in his heart's lining and other injuries.

Doctors said after extensive surgery that Thomas may never be able to walk again. While lying wounded at the shoot-out scene yesterday, he took on-lookers that he could feel nothing below the waist.

Juror Maria Graham, 48, of San Rafael, is in good condition at Letterman General Hospital in San Francisco, after being treated at Marin General for a gunshot wound in the right arm. She was one of the three women hostages the gunmen took along in their escape try.

Another juror, Joyce Rodoni, 25, of Point Reyes Station, was

Last Rites Monday For Haley

A Memorial Mass of the Resurrection will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Monday at St. Sylvester Catholic Church in San Rafael for Marin Superior Court Judge Harold Joseph Haley, 65.

Rosary will be recited at 8 p.m. tomorrow at the church, 1115 San Pedro Road. Friends may call at Keaton's Mortuary, 1022 E Street, San Rafael, between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. tomorrow.

Burial will be at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Judge Haley's death yesterday ended a 37-year career of public service in Marin County.

The San Rafael native was appointed an assistant Marin district attorney in 1933, five years after receiving his law degree from the University of San Francisco and admittance to the bar.

He served as acting district attorney from 1943 to 1945. In 1947 he returned to private practice, and in 1949 was appointed city attorney of San Rafael. He was reelected to the post in 1951 and 1955.

In 1956, he was appointed to the municipal court bench, and won reelection in 1958 and 1964 before being promoted to Marin Superior Court in December 1964.

Judge Haley, of 156 Peacock Drive, was a former chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Marin County; past president of the Marin County Bar Association, Community Chest and Mount Tamalpais Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West, and past chairman of the Marin County Catholic Social Service board.

Surviving are his wife, Gertrude Haley; three daughters, Patricia Davis, Carol Atkinson and Joan Fennone, and 10 grandchildren.

The family prefers contributions to Hanna Boys Center in Aqua Caliente, Sonoma County, or to a favorite charity.

Who Began Shooting Remains A Mystery

The question of who fired the first shot in yesterday's Civic Center melee that left Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley and three others dead remained a mystery today.

In a press conference this morning, Sheriff Inspector Ronald Retana said his department believes an inmate inside the escape van fired two shots at San Quentin guard John W. Mathews and the guard returned the fire with a rifle.

However, the Independent-Journal was told today, it was a shot from outside the escape van that caused one of the escaping inmates to trigger the shotgun blast which killed Judge Haley. The sawed-off shotgun had been rigged with a loop which had been placed around Haley's neck early in the escape attempt.

When the shotgun blast killed Haley, Ast. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas, a hostage in the van, grabbed a gun from one of the inmates and killed at least two and a possible third, in a close-quarters gun battle in the truck, the I-J was told.

When the first shots rang out, lawmen ringing the van opened fire and Retana today said that a total of 12 or 13 shots was fired. It is not known whether Thomas was hit by bullets fired by peace officers or by inmates inside the truck.

Retana said yesterday that the deputies had been ordered not to try to stop the escape vehicle which carried the trio, an accomplice and four hostages.

Retana said today he didn't know if the San Quentin guards had received the same orders and said he thought their radios used a different frequency.

Judy Swaney, secretary in the county elections office, said first thing she saw after the firing began was one of the convicts, seated in the front seat, slumped over. She added that the van had stopped and the firing began.

Another elections office employee, Kenneth L. McKay, said he heard muffled shots and then a barage of rifle fire.

"Shots were rirocheting in our direction, on the dirt underneath us," he said, adding he then sought shelter.

"I don't know what started the shooting," Retana said. "It's possible that a shoot-out took

MARIN COURTS WILL CLOSE IN TRIBUTE

Superior courts in Marin will close Monday in tribute to Judge Harold J. Haley, who was killed in a break for freedom by San Quentin prisoners yesterday.

Municipal courts will be closed in the morning, but Presiding Judge Peter Allen Smith said his department would conduct the criminal calendar and traffic matters in the afternoon.

E. Warren McGuire, presiding judge of superior court, ordered that all regular business on the calendar for Monday be transferred to a future date.

Reagan Orders Probe Into Court Tragedy

Gov. Ronald Reagan and an official of the state Department of Corrections have ordered immediate investigations into yesterday's courtroom abduction and slaying of Marin Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley, but there seems to be no reason the tragic incident couldn't be repeated when court reconvenes next week.

The correction official, chief deputy director Laurence M. Stutsman, called the tragedy the "worst in the history of the department and in the history of the courts."

Marin County's judges and law enforcement officials have no ready answers on how to prevent the violence that left four persons dead and three others wounded at the Civic Center.

No one was searched and there was no armed peace officer in Judge Haley's courtroom yesterday. The same situation will prevail Monday.

"You can't search anyone anytime you want to, "Deputy Sheriff Leo Ballard said yesterday. "It's an illegal search."

Ballard is head bailiff — in charge of men responsible for order in the court. As usual, there was one unarmed bailiff in Judge Haley's court yesterday. There were also four unarmed San Quentin guards. Five orther guards were outside the courtroom. They, too, were unarmed. All were unarmed for the same reason: a gun can be taken away.

"What good would a gun do? asked Ballard's boss, Sheriff's Lt. Newall Snyder, chief of the jail division.

Snyder said he doubted there would be changes in court security. It will be up to the judges to order them, he said. Neither Snyder nor Ballard want armed guards in the courtroom. Prisoners overcoming a guard may get his keys but not a gun, they said.

Yesterday's desperados didn't need guard's guns. They brought their own.

Marin County judges were also at a loss on how to prevent a recurrence of yesterday's incident.

Courts here face unusual dangers, most agreed, because the Hall of Justice serves San Quentin Prison and its inmates.

Superior Court Judge Thomas F. Keating recalled that similar episodes have been narrowly averted in the past.

"The danger's always there and always has been, " he said.

In an earlier case involving trial of San Quentin inmates, someone outside the court smuggled in guns and taped them under the counsel's table in the old courthouse in San Rafael.

"These things have been dis-

FROM S.F. STATE

New Sonoma State President

By BONNIE BARD

Earl W. Jones, right-hand man to S.I. Hayakawa, president of San Francisco State, yesterday named acting president of Sonoma State College.

State College Chancellor, Glenn S. Dumke, said the appointment would be effective Monday. Campus officials said Jones was expected on campus Monday for meetings with faculty and staff.

In making the appointment, Dumke said, "In a careful weighing of matters involving Sonoma State College and its future well-being, I have concluded that the college's best interests will be served by the immediate appointment of an acting president with the full power of the office."

The state college board of trustees had been scheduled to consider the appointment of a new president at its meeting in September.

"Preparation for the 1970-71 academic year is an important period at all state colleges, "Dumke said." I am pleased that Earl Jones has accepted the acting presidency at a time that encompasses this period of planning.

"Mr. Jones has demonstrated great skill and administrative grasp of academic issues at San Francisco State College. I am confident Sonoma State College will benefit from his many insights and ability," Dumke said.

Jones, 49, will succeed Dr. Ambrose R. Nichols Jr., who resigned the presidency effective last month.

The college has been the scene of many student demonstrations in the last year. Its troubles were recently compounded by charges at the state level of mismanagement. Chancellor Dumke ordered an all-out investigation of the college on July 28 and sent a six-man team onto campus.

Even the college's search for a president has been rocked by controversey. Early in July one of the student members of the selection team resigned, claiming that other committee members began the selection process already in favor of James B. Enochs, the college's vice president.

The release of Enochs' name as a candidate forced Dumke to delay appointment of an official president at the July 14 meeting of the state college trustees.

Jones will serve as acting president of the college until a new campus head is named, probably late this year or early next year.

Last year Jones was named by Hayakawa as assistant executive vice president and then executive vice president.

Jones said he was honored with the appointment. "There are few opportunities in our culture these days that are more exciting, more challenging, or more important than those that exist in the administration of higher education."

"Sonoma State College is ideally situated to provide a highly constructive educational experience for its students and service to an important surrounding area, as well as the state as a whole," he said.

The new acting president has been at San Francisco State since 1954, initially as a part-time associate professor of music. He became a member of the college's academic senate in 1967.

Jones received his bachelor's degree in 1942 from Ithaca College, N.Y. He received his master's degree from Indiana University in 1948 and has completed additonal graduate work.

He served as chairman of the division of fine arts at Union College in Kentucky from 1950 until 1952, when he moved to California.

A resident of Burlingame, Jones served as director of music at the First Methodist Church from 1952 to 1954. He was umsic editor for the San Mateo Times from 1954 to 1962.

He is a native of Towanda Pa.

Last Rites Pending For 3 Gun Victims

Funeral arrangements for David McClain are pending at the Ashley-Grigsby Mortuary in Los Angeles.

The bodies of William A. Christmas and Jonathan P. Jackson, who died yesterday with McClain at the Marin County Civic Center, are being held at Keaton's Mortuary in San Rafael, pending arrangements.

Indians Threaten Coast Guard Fight

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—The Indian occupants of Alcatraz have threatened to put on their war paint if the Coast Guard tries to restore the island's lighthouse.

The Indians, who have held the abandoned federal penitentiary since last November, vowed to fight the Coast Guard unless the federal government resumes water and electricity services at the same time.

"They'll have to remove us or come over if we don't get the water," said John Trudell, a spokesman for the ruling will continue to operate the light with a gosaline-powered generator. They relit the beacon shortly after the Coast Guard cut off power May 29 and have kept it going sporadically.

The light was turned off after a federal caretaker abandoned the old prison and the Coast Guard announced offshore warning buoys would replace it. But fishermen and other mariners complained absence of the light was a hazard to navigation and the Coast Guard announced Tuesday it would restore the 126-year-old landmark.

However, the Indians blocked crews trying to land Thursday, saying they wouldn't be welcomed until the island's huge water barge was returned. The barge was removed by the General Services Administration at the same time the light was extinguished.

Thomas Hannon, regional administrator for GSA, responded that it is "not in my power to provide services to anyone other than government employes" on the island.

Salinas Growers May Face Strike, Boycott

SALINAS, Calif. (UPI)—Cesar Chavez is threatening a strike and boycott against Salinas Valley growers in retaliation for the firing of 400 workers who refused to join the rival Teamsters union.

Chavez's AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee and the independent Teamsters are engaged in a battle to sign up workers in this vegetable-growing area.

Chavez said Friday the strike would make his five-year battle with grape growers "look like a picnic." He warned it was only "hours away" after the 400 workers were dismissed.

The Teamsters stunned the farm workers union late last month by signing contracts with 30 Salinas Valley growers. The contracts require employes to join the Teamsters within 10 days.

Chavez described the contracts as "a stab in the back" and vowed to fight the Teamsters organizing efforts.

However, the Los Angeles Times reported Friday the farm workers union and the Teamsters were close to an agreement to settle their differences.

The Times said it had learned from one source that a verbal agreement had already been reached. But another source said that "progress has been made, but there are still some complications. But, while the whole thing could collapse at the last minute, I think there will be a formal agreement by next week."

According to the report, Catholic churchmen, presumably the bishops committee of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops which played an important role in settling the grape strike, pressed both sides in the dispute to get peace talks started.

In Salinas, Chavez said growers have been firing workers for about a week and began discharging full crews Thursday.

He said a "large number" of the fired workers were employed by Freshpict Foods, Inc., a Salinas-based subsidiary of Purex Corp.

In Oxnard, Freshpict's northwest division manager, Daryl Arnold, confirmed the firings. "It's not our doing," he said. "It is the Teamsters forcing terms of the new agreement. Workers can't go into the fields if they are not members of the Teamsters."

Chavez said the "situation looks very good for a strike."

"We could be hours away from an all-out boycott and strike that would make the grape thing look like a picnic," Chavez said. "We are much stronger and have more experience than we did five years ago. We're not going to let them get away with this."

Hippies' Suit Filed Against Unfair Arrest

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A federal court suit Friday requested an injunction which would stop Berkeley police from treating "hippies" as "prisoners of war in an occupied country."

The suit was filed by Youth Law Center in San Francisco and Berkeley Neighborhood Legal Services on behalf of any "hippie" who has been or might be arrested in the city.

It charged that at least 300 juveniles have been arrested in Berkeley since July 9 as part of a police effort to "clean up" the city by ridding it of persons under 18, particularly those who affect a "hippie" appearance.

For the past month, Berkeley police have been arresting minors from out of town and either jailing them or sending them back to their parents. Nearly 500 youths have been picked up under laws requiring minors to be under parental control.

The suit charges such action violates eight constitutional rights.

A hearing on the requested injunction was set Tuesday before U.S. Dist. Judge Lloyd H. Burke.

Army Drops All Projects For Presidio

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Rep. William S. Mailliard says the Pentagon has agreed to suspned all plans for new construction at the San Francisco Presidio.

The San Francisco Republican urged Friday that the ban remain in effect until completion of a study of all federal lands in the Bay Area for possible inclusion in the proposed Golden Gate National Recreation Area.

Mailliard's legislation for the recreation area proposed inclusion of portions of the Presidio, Fort Mason and Fort Miley in San Francisco and Forts Barry, Baker and Cronkhite in Marin County.

Suspension of Presidio construction halts the proposed building of a new school — which has been opposed by neighborhood groups — and a high-rise hospital, hundreds of new housing units and possibly enlarging approaches to the Golden Gate Bridge.

Regents' Faculty Pay Cut To Face Lawsuit

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The California State Employes' Association has filed suit in an effort to restore a 5 per cent pay raise for state college and University of California faculty members.

The action, filed in Los Angeles Superior Court Friday, charged that $18.6 million to finance the raises was deleted by the legislature as a punitive and politically motivated measure.

THEY TOOK THE PICTURES

I-J photographers Jim Kean (left) and Roger Bockrath review the day's events after taking the dramatic series of pictures of the Hall of Justice abduction and slayings. Both risked their lives. Bockrath was shot at and Kean was threatened by a prisoner brandishing two handguns. The photographers have received inquiries from newspapers and magazines from as far away as London and Brazil about their experience and use of their pictures. I-J Publisher Wishard A. Brown said today, "Today it takes courage to be a reporter, guts to be a photographer and dedication to be a newspaperman, and I salute Jim Kean and Roger Bockrath for an outstanding newspaper job."

Defense Fails To Crack Up Tate Witness

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — During seven days of cross-examination defense attorney Irving Kanarek has constantly hammered the veracity of Linda Kasabian's story of the Tate-LaBianca murders.

But during a break in Friday's session, Assistant District Attorney Vincent Bugliosi said he was convinced of the truth of the 21-year-old blonde's statements. He said her testimony tallied exactly with a statement given and later retracted by defendant Susan Atkins.

"I listened to the account of both girls, and Miss Atkins has recanted her story and said it isn't true. But it turns out that Linda Kasabian tells exactly the same story. How in the world can these two girls have invented exactly the same story?" he said.

Most of the afternoon session was devoted to legal maneuverings in the chambers of Superior Court Judge Charles H. Older and, at the end of the day, the prosecution agreed to a defense request that it formally petition the court next week to grant Mrs. Kasabian immunity from prosecution for her testimony.

The defense maintained that Mrs. Kasabian's testimony might be "tainted" in favor of the prosecution so long as she was liable to prosecution for the murders.

Bugliosi said he was satisfied she was telling the truth and would continue to do so. He said the state was agreeable to granting her immunity now, on the condition that she continue to testify in the case and in any follow-up matters.

During the morning session, Kanarek continued to deluge Mrs. Kasabian with color photographs, taken by police, of the victims of the massacre at the Tate estate.

She burst into tears when Kanarek showed her a color picture of the body of Voityck Frykowski, who was stabbed more than 60 times and shot during the rampage last Aug. 8.

She gasped "Oh, God," then turned to stare at the four defendants — Miss Atkins, Leslie van Houten, Patricia Krenwinkle and the man accused of masterminding the slayings, Charles Manson — and silently mouthed "How could you do that?"

The four sat impassively and did not reply.

"Why are you crying now?" asked Kanarek.

"I just can't believe it," she replied.

"You can't believe what?"

"I can't believe they could do such a thing."

"Are you sure you don't mean that you couldn't do such a thing?"

"I know I didn't do it. I didn't have it in me to do such an animalistic thing."

RESULT OF TREATY?

West Allies Hopeful Berlin Tension Dies

BERLIN (UPI)—Western Allied officials said today they hoped the nonaggression treaty between the Soviet Union and West Germany would result in a Big Four agreement to lessen tension in Berlin.

They noted a report from Moscow that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko privately assured West German Foreign Minister Walter Scheel the Soviets would take a more benevolent attitude on Berlin when the Big Four ambassadors meet here again next month.

The American, British and French ambassadors to West Germany and the Soviet ambassador to East Germany adjourned their talks for the summer after six meetings in which no progress was made toward solving rhe 25-year-old Berlin problem.

They held their last meeting July 21 and agreed to meet again in September at a date to be set later.

Western officials said Pyotr A. Abrassimov, Soviet ambassador to East Germany, had shown no sign of willingness to compromise in the talks that began March 26.

They said Abrassimov's atitude at the next meeting might give an indication if the Soviets really plan to change their tactics in Berlin.

Western officials said some pressure would be on Abrassimov because West German leaders have said the treaty concluded today will not be ratified unless some progress is made in the ambassadors' talks.

The Western Allied ambassadors have proposed an agreement to end East-West German harassment of traffic to West Berlin, restoration of East-West Berlin telephone service cut by the East Germans in 1953, and the right for West Berliners to pass through the wall to East Berlin.

Until now Abrassimov has blocked such agreements by asserting that such matters must be taken up with the "sovereign German Democratic Republic.

He said such problems are beyond the competence of the ambassadors.

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

Texas Schools Sued

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Nixon administration has gone to court to force the integration of the last big block of southern school districts still maintaining a dual school system.

The Justice Department Friday filed suit in federal court against the state of Texas and 26 of its school districts, asking that they be ordered to carry out desegregation plans when school starts three weeks from now.

Only 18 school districts in the South are not now in compliance with integration laws or engaged in some form of litigation or negotiation with federal authorities, the Justice Department said. Seven are in Georgia, there are five each in Virginia and Tennessee, and one in Louisiana.

Flights Delayed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — United Air Lines reports delays at New York and Chicago of up to an hour, but there's no air traffic controller slowdwon. This time it's the pilots.

It was learned Friday the Air Line Pilots Association ALPA is staging the "WOE Program" — for "withdrawal of enthusiasm" — against the airline because it failed to reach a contract agreement with ALPA.

The slowdown is being engineered by pilots moving slowly along taxiways, nitpicking insistence on immediate correction of minor repairs and any other methods they can think of.

Belfast Flares Again

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — Gasoline bombs hurled from a speeding car today broke the calm that had settled on Northern Ireland after eight consecutive nights of rioting.

British troops used nausea gas to disperse about 50 youths throwing rocks at them before dawn in the Roman Catholic area of Bogside and Londonderry, northwest of Belfast, an army spokesman said.

In Belfast, five gasoline bombs were hurled from a speeding car at a match factory in the Catholic Donegal Road area but caused little damage, police said.

The army said no other incidents were reported since Thursday, the first violence-free night after eight nights of rioting in Northern Ireland.

Purge Charged

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — The state's key witness in the trial of Black Panther Lonnie McLucas testified Friday he believes fellow party member Alex Rackley was slain during an alleged party purge instead of for being a police informer.

George Sams Jr., told a Superior Court jury, "My reason for why Alex Rackley was murdered was to make a lot of young people in New Haven straighten up and also as revenge for the New York 21."

Sams was referring to the arrest of 21 Panthers in New York last year for an alleged 1968 plot to bomb police stations, railroad tracks, department stores and the Bronx Botanical Gardens.

Farm Bill Expected

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon may have on his desk by Labor Day a bill to set the first limit on individual crop subsidies.

Chairman Allen J. Ellender, of the Senate Agriculture Committee said Friday he expected his committee to report the general farm bill for 1971 through 1973 to the Senate floor by Aug. 18. He said there was a chance the Senate could pass it before Labor Day.

House and Senate conferees already are trying to work out an individual farm sibsidy limit stipulated in an appropriations bill. The Senate wrote a $20,000 subsidy limit into its version.

In the new general farm bill, the House has written a $55,000 ceiling and Ellender said in an interview he expects to get the higher figure through the Senate.

Astronaut To Tour

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Astronaut Frank Borman leaves Monday for another world tour, but this time as a government representative seeking humane treatment and release of American prisoners of war in Indochina.

Borman made his first world tour after his Apollo 8 spacecraft, which he commanded, made the first manned orbit of the moon in 1968.

President Nixon appointed Borman, now an executive of Eastern Air Lines, as his personal representative Friday to seek third-party assistance in behalf of 1,500 Americans listed as missing or captured in Southeast Asia.

Borman's first stop will be Moscow. He'll also confer with U.S. peace talk negotiators in Paris and will travel to Sweden, Poland, Switzerland, Algeria, India, Laos, Thailand, South Vietnam, Japan and Canada.

Charter Approved

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A new city charter which would increase the power of the mayor and council and impose controls on independent departments has been approved by the City Council for placement on the Nov. 3 general election ballot.

By a 12-3 roll call vote Friday, the council approved the final charter resolution and asked the Board of Supervisors to consolidate the new streamlined charter.

If supervisors decline, the measure would have to be deferred until next spring's municipal elections.

The proposed charter specifies the mayor as the "executive officer" of the city, with the council its "governing body."

Playhouse Gone

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The famed Pasadena Playhouse, which gave many well-known actors their first break, is gone.

The financially troubled facility was sold at auction to the Bank of America, the only bidder, Friday, for $285,675.47.

The theater's financial troubles came to a head four years ago when the Internal Revenue Service padlocked the doors because the management failed to pay $31,000 in employe withholding taxes.

Strike End Urged

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Calling it a very unusual strike, Gov. Paul Laxalt has urged workers at the Nevada Test Site to cross picket lines and return to work next week if their unions held signed contracts.

The strike began more than two months ago when contracts covering 10 unions and 2,000 employes expired June 1. It has since caused the delay of at least two underground nuclear weapons tests at the site, the heart of the United States underground testing program.

DEATH ENDS DARING ESCAPE TRY

The body of one of the four men — who broke for freedom yesterday from the Marin County Hall of Justice — lies crumpled over the shotgun and carbine used in their fatal venture. Two of the other men and Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley died when gunfire broke out as this get-away van was halted near the Civic Center. Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas was wounded as was one of three women jurors abducted with the judge and Thomas.

Reduced Bail Denied Drug Suspect Pair

A bearded young Washington State businessman and a young woman who declared to the courtroom yesterday she "works for God" yesterday were denied reduced bail on pending narcotics charges.

Municipal Court Judge Peter Allen Smith ordered the $5,000 bail on each to remain in effect until Monday to enable the district attorney's office to prepare complaints against Cathy Marie Brownell, 20, of 139 Bayview Avenue, San Rafael, and Russell Carl Ellis, 25, of Centralia, Washington.

The two and a 17-year-old boy were arrested Thursday night by county drug abuse bureau and state narcotics agents in a raid at the Bayview Avenue address. Four other persons were released, agents said.

Ellis, who heads a firm that makes fiberglass bodies for sports cars, was formerly a psychologist and juvenile worker, his attorney said.

The district attorney's office explained yesterday it had been unable to finish complaints because of the furor over the death of Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley and three kidnapers at the Hall of Justice late yesterday morning.

The man and woman were booked on suspicion of possessing and offering for sale dangerous drugs. Agents' reports detailed finding marijuana, hasish and what appeared to be LSD in the house, and marijuana plants in a car at the house.

Hydrofoil Begins Shakedown Runs

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The hydrofoil Pegasus I has started a series of shakedown cruises on San Francisco Bay.

The Hydrodyne Marine Corp. of San Francisco and Port Hueneme, said Friday tests would continue throughout the month. The company proposed using the vessels for commuter trips on the bay.

The firm plans to make a proposal to the Golden Gate Bridge District.

Salaries Anger Marin Management Workers

By WAT TAKESHITA

Top level employees in Marin County government, from County Administrator Alan Bruce on down, will send a bitter letter to the board of supervisors Tuesday, charging "epochally unfair treatment" for not getting pay raises just because they had no union representation.

The letter concludes with a warning that unless the pay of management and mid-management employees is reconsidered, all the county's top brass (except elected officials) will be forced "to exercise our legal right to organize for collective bargaining."

The letter is singed by almost 100 employees in the management category, including Bruce and his entire staff, and department heads such as Donald R. Frost of public works, Werner Von Gundell of planning, Dr. Donovan O. Cooke of medical, Betty Presley of public social services, Chief Louis J. Bloom of county fire, and all other unelected department heads.

A total of 138 management and mid-management employees were bypassed for raises during budget discussions, while 862 others got raises because they were represented by bargaining units.

If the management group, including Bruce and his staff, were to join unions, the county would be left without a negotiating team to bargain with employee organizations and unions.

Attached to the letter is a list of pay brackets showing that managerial employees are not necessarily the highest paid among county staff. For example, the letter said, pay raises went to six who are getting more than $1,551 per month, five drawing more than $1,350, and seven getting more than $1,150 per month, all because they belonged to bargaining units.

Among managerial employees, 96 who are getting $1,150 or less received no raise. Some of them, getting $550 to $650 per month, received no raise, whereas a half dozen in the $1,551 to $1,650 group got raises because they had representation.

"It is precedent shattering; it is destructive in character; it has demoralized us to a point where we feel our jobs have taken on a character of uselessness," the letter asserted.

"We propose you approve a salary adjustment for us of 5 per cent effective Jan. 1, 1971."

The increased cost to the county under the proposal would be $50,000 this fiscal year.

The managerial group also asks for an improved salary policy to resolve inequities in the future.

A separate and milder letter will be sent to the supervisors from all elected officials expressing concern about the morale of management personnel because of salary inequities. It will ask the supervisors to take steps to keep management personnel from being forced into unions and collective bargain-

Ohio Man Loses More Than Shirt

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI)— William Fred Eggers, 25, a city employe from Cincinnati, lost his shirt—and a little more—Friday when he visited the capital city.

Eggers told police he was robbed at gunpoint by two women who forced him to take off his clothes and get out of his car.

Eggers also lost $48, and several credit cards. His car was recovered a few blocks away.

New Primary School Urged In Petaluma

With 410 new homes to be occupied on the east side of Petaluma by Sept. 1 and another 804 on the drawing boards, Old Adobe School District trustees have been advised to begin planning a fifth elementary school to meet the population explosion.

School Supt. Dean D. Magowan told the trustees Thursday night that the 410 new units, in nine various subdivision, are to be occupied by the start of school in the fall. And he said that the Sun Development Co. will present plans for a 300-unit subdivision at the Petaluma Planning Commission meeting on Aug. 18 at 7:30 p.m.

Magowan said the 300-unit development, known as Sun Terrace Park, will be located at Ely Boulevard and East Washington Street. He said the homes will probably attract families with small children.

The district now operates three elementary schools and has plans for a fourth on St. Francis Drive and a six-room addition to La Tercera School.

Magowan also told the board that Young American Homes Inc. plans to develop 100 acres near Lucchesi Park next spring. He said the acerage could produce as many as 504 additional homes.

The board noted a portion of the developments will fall within the Rural Waugh School district and set a joint meeting for Sept. 3 at 8 p.m. to discuss the added enrollment burden both districts face.

Male, Not Female

treated for shock at Marin General and released yesterday, as was the third woman juror, Joyce Whittmer, Mill Valley.

Ruchell Magee, 31, the only surviving member of the desperate gang, is in fair condition at Marin General today. He was wounded in the final shootout.

Jim Kean, Independent-Journal photographer who took pictures as ordered by the gang themselves and their prisoners before the bloodletting yesterday, said the first thing that came to mind was a resembalance to airliner hijackings.

"I was absolutely appalled when I heard all that shooting" a few minutes later, Kean recalled. "I thought they were just going to let them go with their hostages."

The gunmen had told Kean, "You take all the pictures you want. We are the revolutionaries."

But the getaway was blocked, and deadly gunfire followed, although Sheriff Louis Mountanos said he had ordered his men to follow the gang in unmarked cars rather than try to stop them while they held hostages.

The bleached-haired Jackson, authorities learned hours after the killings, was a 17-year-old high school graduate who had rented the yellow getaway van under his own name Thursday in San Francisco.

San Quentin authorities confirmed he had visited the prison earlier this week, to see his brother George Jackson, 28. The elder Jackson is being held in San Quentin for San Francisco trial on deaths in the Soledad brothers' bloodletting earlier this year.

However, the officials said, they had no indication that McClain and George Jackson knew each other. They also said the younger Jackson had no major criminal record. The two convicts were in different cell blocks at San Quentin.

But attaches in Judge Haley's court said Magee, a defense witness for McClain, had been "very heavy" on the race issue, and Warren Wells, identified as a Panther member by his San Quentin guards, had been on the witness stand Thursday.

Both courtroom bailiffs and San Quentin guards had been uneasy about McClain's demands that batches of five or six hard-to-handle convicts be brought to the courtroom daily.

Chronologically, here is what happened, as nearly as the sheriff's office, Dist. Atty. Bruce B. Bales and other authorities can piece it together:

The trial of McClain was nearly halfway into its fifth day. McClain, acting as his own attorney, had put fellow San Quentin inmate Ruchell Magee, 31, on the witness stand.

Judge Haley's bailiff, James Layne, 28, was seated in the back row of the courtroom audience section.

As the trial droned on, Layne saw a young man enter the courtroom and sit down only half a dozen seats from the bailiff. Layne recalled that he had seen the youth — now identified as Jackson — the day before. Jackson had asked Layne whether the McClain case was in progress, and had sought details.

Layne said he nodded when Jackson entered the courtroom Friday shortly after 10:30 a.m., but became alarmed when he noticed Jackscn was carrying a satchel, had a bulge under the left side of his jacket, and was keeping his right hand in his pocket.

"I was just getting ready to ask him to come outside (into the hall) with me when he stood up and swung (pointed) a gun at me," Layne said.

Jackson ordered everybody to freeze — to drop — and tossed weapons to McClain and Magee.

A confusing 40 minutes of terror had begun.

Jackson's bag contained a semiautomatic carbine, a strange weapon contrived of a sawed-off shotgun with what looked like dynamite sticks — but actually were railroad fuses, other weapons and several rolls of fine wire, similar to piano wire.

There was also a roll of adhesive tape, which McClain used to tie the shotgun around Haley's neck.

Jackson went into the hall and captured and brought into the courtroom the San Quentin guards who were holding another convict, William Arthur Christmas, 38.

Jackson, Magee and Christmas also tried to free two other San Quentin inmates held in a small room beside the courtroom, but the inmates, Willie Reddics, 33, and Mark Cisneros, 23, refused to join the plot.

Magee and Christmas forced the San Quentin guards to remove shakles and handcuffs, with Magee declaring "I want to be a free man, so help me, God."

A family passing by in the hallway, Mr. and Mrs. Tim Wylie and their 17-month-old son, in a stroller, were captured by Jackson and brought into the courtroom.

"They argued about taking the baby along as a hostage, but one guy (McClain) said no," Wylie recalled. "If they had, I'd probably be dead now. I would have jumped them."

Also captured in the front hall was Earl Cummesky of the sheriff's identification office.

Meanwhile, Jackson, Christmas, and Magee were wiring together the three women jurors, Thomas and court reported Kenneth Combs. The cons were so nervous they didn't tie me up very well; I slipped my hands out of the wire and just lay down on the floor." Combs said.

Practically everyone in the courtroom except the five hostages was forced to remain on the floor throughout, with Jackson volleying curses and death threats.

The captives reported Jackson kept declaring, "I want to kill somebody;; and urged his companions to "tie them up tight," and said, "I want them to know what it's like" to be bound.

McClain harangued the captives, on how he had been done an injustice, wanted justice and "I want my freedom, by God." He also warned the other gunmen to remain calm and yelled at Jackson when he began extricating the apparent dynamite sticks and tossing them to the convicts: "Take it easy, we don't know how old that stuff is."

The gunmen nervously bickered about whom to take as hostages. Bailiff Layne reported McClain said, "Women are too slow; the bailiff is cool; we don't want the baby."

Throughout all the hectic courtroom action, McClain stayed with the judge, holding him at gunpoint.

The other captives said Haley repeatedly urged calm, assured the gunmen the crowd would be cooperative, and agreed to McClain's demand to telephone Sheriff Mountanos.

After Haley warned the sheriff the courtroom had been captured, McClain took over. He warned Mountanos to "keep your dog-pigs away," courtroom witnesses heard.

Mountanos said McClain told him to come to the courtroom, where the gunmen would send someone out to negotiate.

The sheriff, Inspector Harvey Teague and other aides rushed down a staircase near the courtroom — but the gunmne already had herded the hostages into the hall, and made the advancing sheriff's men raise their hands.

McClain marched the judge toward the nearby press room, after having I-J photographer Jim Kean take their pictures in the hallway.

After an abortive attempt to get into the press room -- apparently to gain the newsmen's ear for demands he made several times for his own freedom and those of the "Soledad brothers" — McClain and his prisoner rejoined the rest of the gunmen and their hostages in the front hallway.

The newsmen, earlier threatened by a gunman in the hallway and warned by Bailiff Layne — who raced out the courtroom's rear door the second the gunmen left via the front door — had locked their office door.

As Mountanos and other lawmen helplessly watched, the gunmen herded their captives into an elevator and down to the main lobby of the Hall of Justice. It opens onto an archway which also contains the entrance to the sheriff's department.

There, Sheriff's Lt. Tom Lightfoot, bailiff Arthur V. Wiggins — erroneously identified in early reports in the I-J yesterday John Higgins and as a San Quentin guard — and other deputies had armed and stationed themselves.

Lightfoot said Jackson cursed them and ordered them to drop their weapons, declaring they'd kill the judge. He fired three shots into the air to punctuate the order.

Wiggins obeyed orders to drop his shotgun at Jackson's feet, did so, and slowly backed off, hands in air, while the gunman cursed and threatened to kill him. Lightfoot and the others ducked behind a patrol car; Lightfoot used the car's radio to warn other lawmen that the group of nine gunmen and hostages was heading toward the armed band's truck, a yellow rental vehicle parked on the west side of the building.

After loading their hostages, the gunmen drove away, apparently pausing to change drivers, according to eyewitnesses County Clerk George Gnoss, Asst. County Coroner Richard Fontaine and others.

"I ran around toward the east side of the building, when I heard shots," Lightfoot recalled.

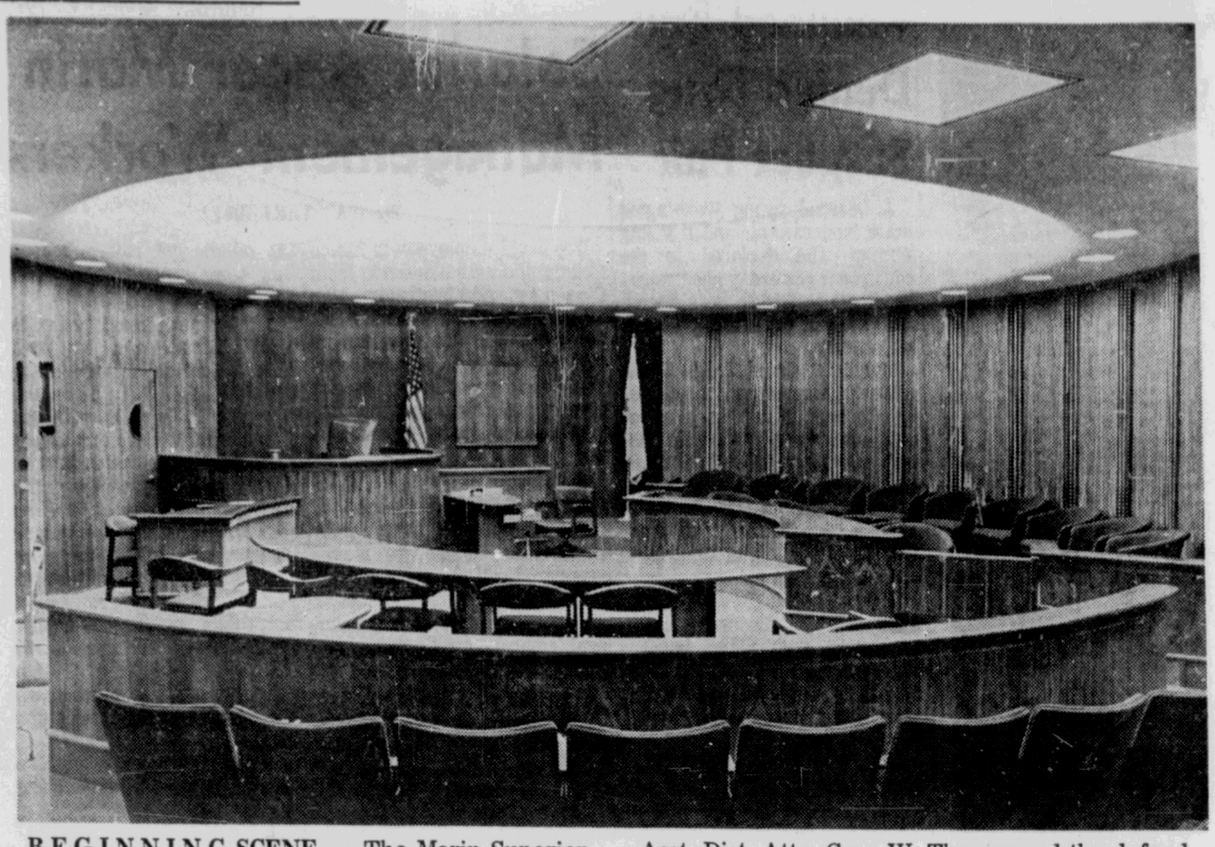
By then, alerted by a broadcast, sheriff's cars, San Quentin cars, California HIghway Patrol vehicles and police cars had ringed the building, blocking exit to the east.

Fontaine said he saw a San Quentin guard race toward the archway, suddenly pause, then aim and fire at the van. There were many shots, and a flash inside the van, Fontaine recalled, which may been the fatal shotgun blast that blew away the lower of Judge Haley's face.

Lawmen raced to the van; the survivors were pulled out, and Dist. Atty. Bales arrived and talked to his wounded assistant. Thomas, Bales said, told him that he "grabbed a gun and shot three of them. I hope I killed them."

Sheriff's deputies and Hamilton Air Force Base demolition experts gingerly extracted sticks of "dynamite" rolling around inside the van and carried in the gunmen's pockets, raced through the roadblocks into an open field — and found the sticks were not dangerous.

Crowds thronged the scene, sheriff's detectives scraped evidence off the roadway, the wounded were cared for and dead were covered and removed, and the Civic Center flags were lowered in tribute to the slain judge.



BEGINNING SCENE — The Marin Superior Courtroom of Judge Harold J. Haley — where yesterday's tragic events began — is quiet and empty today. Yesterday, a seat in the spectators' section (foreground) of the court was occupied by Jonathan Peter Jackson. At the counsels' table immediately in front of the spectators' section sat Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas and the defendant, David McClain. Court clerk Frank Kirby sat at the small table to their left. Above and behind Kirby was Judge Haley. To the right of the judge's stand, Ruchell Magee was testifying from the witness box and the jury was seated in the group of chairs at the far right.

Inmates Described As Discipline Problems

A San Quentin Prison official yesterday described the three inmates involved in a shooting spree at Civic Center as "severe discipline problems."

Parole representative J.R. O'Brien said the men, James David McClain, Ruchell Magee and William Arthur Christmas, "posed a problem to themselves and others by their activities and apparent desires not to conform to any type of control."

Christmas and McClain were killed as they attempted to flee the Civic Center in a van with Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley and four other hostages.

McClain was being retried before Judge Haley yesterday on a charge of stabbing a San Quentin guard, E. K. Erwin, with a prison-made knife during a fracas in the San Quentin kitchen area. A hung jury ended the first trial in June and on both occasions, McClain acted as his own attorney.

Magee and Christmas were witnesses in McClain's behalf, O'Brien said.

Each man had a long history of trouble with the law. Each had difficulty adjusting to prison life, O'Brien said, and each was given a wide berth by prison personnel and other inmates.

O'Brien described their prison records:

RUCHELL MAGEE, 31, born in Franklinton, La. His first conviction was in March 1956 in Washington Parish, La., for attempted rape.

Paroled in 1962, he moved to California and was arrested again in March 1963 in Los Angeles on suspicion of robbery and kidnapping. Convicted on the count, he was sentenced to life in prison with his first chance for parole in December 1970.

O'Brien said he had 17 violations of prison rules during his stay in San Quentin, most of them minor. These included disobeying orders, conduct which might lead to violence, a poor attitude toward work and violating mailing privileges.

O'Brien called him a "marginal" prisoner, neither a severe problem nor a model inmate. Of the three, he was the best behaved.

WILLIAM ARTHUR CHRISTMAS, 27, was born in Omaha, Neb. His first offense came in 1962, when he was 21. He spent a year in the Alameda County Jail for burglary.

In April 1964 he was convicted of second-degree burglary and sent to San Quentin. While there in March 1966 he was convicted of possessing a weapon and sentenced to three years to life. He had passed his first date of parole eligibility in 1967.

"He was a serious discipline problem," O'Brien said. He was shuffled from one prison to another in an attempt to permit him to start over if he wished.

Transferred to Soledad Prison in 1967, he was sent back to San Quentin in 1968, to Folsom later the same year and finally back to San Quentin.

O'Brien explained that this often is done to allow prisoners to break old images if they wish. An inmate builds a reputation when he is confined to one institution for a long time, and he may find difficulty discarding the image, O'Brien said.

"We give them a chance to start fresh if they want," O'Brien said. "But Christmas proved that this was the type of prisoner that he wanted to be."

JAMES DAVID MC CLAIN, 37, was born in El Paso, Tex. His criminal record began in 1954 with vagrancy, traffic violations, and petty thefts and by 1960 he was committing robberies. He was sent to San Quentin from San Joaquin County in 1962 for robbery with a prior felony conviction.

Paroled in March 1967, he again was imprisoned in December 1968 for a parole violation — possessing a firearm. He drew a six-month-to-15-year term for the conviction.

On March 2, 1970, McClain was involved in the incident for which he was being retried yesterday.

O'Brien said that Erwin, the guard, asked McClain for his identification card, but the inmate allegedly pulled the knife and stabbed Erwin in the chest.

"His problem was the most serious of all these men. His hostility to the staff made him a dangerous man," O'Brien said.

MYSTERY

place inside the van." He added there appeared to be about eight bullet holes in the van, but could not say whether they were fired from inside or outside.

Retana said he was not sure of the number of shots fired or of the number of officers positioned awaiting the yellow van's exit.

"Reports on the number of shots fired range all the way up to 50 and 100," he added.

Retana said the sheriff's office will be aided this weekend in its investigation of the gunfight by a specialist from the state criminal investigation office.

Witnesses, including an Independent-Journal prographer and county elections office personnel, said two gray patrol cars formed a roadblock in the convict's escape route on the east side of the Hall of Justice.

(A spokesman for San Quentin Prison said yesterday prison vehicles are gray.)

"There were two gray cars partially blocking the road," an elections office official said. "However there was enough space on the left of them for another vehicle to get around."

I-J protographer Roger Bockrath, who risked his life to photograph the action, said he also saw the cars, but no space.

"They would have had to wipe out the front of their panel truck to get through that roadblock," Bockrath said.

Still another employee of the elections office, Cedell Bradford, said the first shots sounded muffled, leading them to think they were fired from within the van.

Other witnesses also said the first shots sounded muffled.

Asst. County Coroner Richard Fontaine said he first saw a flash from the inside of the van, coupled with an exploding back window.

Reagan Orders Probe Into Court Tragedy

cussed by judges for a long time," Keating explained, "and no real solution has been found."

Use of armed guards in the courtroom presents severe legal questions, he noted. Constitutional arguments that sight of such weaponry might prejudice jurors have repeatedly been raised.

"Using enough bailiffs to make sure that no person could bring weapons into the courtroom is a possibility, "he conceded. But the courts "never can get enough bailiffs to serve us now," he added.

Peter Allen Smith, presiding judge of Marin Municipal Court, favored "consideration of having as much of the procedure as possible take place at San Quentin instead of here."

He felt that such nonjury matters as arraignment and plead ings could be conducted in the prison. He added that it might even be possible to conduct trials in the prison. He cited the constitutional requirement that a defendant be given public trial as the major hurdle.

Marin County's judges have made a policy of refusing to arm bailiffs and often have ordered prisoners' handcuffs removed whenever a jury was present. Yesterday's defendant was wearing no handcuffs.

Some bailiffs and court attaches late yesterday were less concerned with constitutional protection rights and more vociferous in demanding armed guards in court.

Some said yesterday's violence could be blamed on violence sprouting on campuses and in the streets across the nation. Others called for frisking every would-be spectator at the courtroom door or the use of detection devices similar to those airlines are testing to thwart hijackers.

Governor Reagan, in a statement issued only hours after the tradedy, extended his deepest sympathies to the families of Judge Haley, Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary Thomas and others who were the innocent victims of this vicious attack.

"I want to assure their families that a thorough investigation of this tragedy will be made immediately," the governor said.

In a statement that followed closely on the heels of the governor's, Stutsman, promised a review of security provisions for prison inmates appearing in court.

"It's very difficult to make this a foolproof thing" he said. To make security foolproof, he added, "would go counter to a lot of things we hold dear in this country."

Each judge has sole responsibility for the conduct of his court, Stutsman said. "We have never urged on any judge that he be more lenient or more relaxed with people."

Terming the tragedy "the worst in the history of the department and in the History of the courts," he noted that most judges were reluctant to jeopardize an accused man's civil rights by strong security measures.

The "real danger" comes when prison inmates summon other inmates as character witnesses, he said. "We've gotten by, but not without some incidents — but nothing like this," Stustman said.

"Obviously we're going to have to sit down and think about this," he said.

OBITUARIES

Edward C. Gates, 61, Succumbs

Edward C. Gates, manager of the Tamalpais Theater in San Anselmo for 21 years, died yesterday at a local hospital after suffering an apparent heart attack on Thursday. He was 61.

Gates was born in Omaha, Neb., but moved with his family to Butte City, Glenn County, in 1912. He went to Berkeley in the late 1920s to attend the University of California and had lived in the Bay Area since.

After two years at the university, he transferred to Armstrong Business College, also in Berkeley, where he earned a degree in business administration.

He managed movie theaters for Fox West Coast Theaters in the Oakland area before joining the San Anselmo theater in 1949.

He lived with his wife, Teresa, at 10 Amberwood Lane, San Anselmo.

Gates was an Army veteran of World War II and belonged to the San Anselmo Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce. He was president of the chamber in 1957-58.

Also surviving is a sister, Dorothy Foster of Pleasanton.

Funeral will be Monday at 2 p.m. at the Chapel of the Hills, San Anselmo, followed by private entombment.

EDNA GARRIGAN

Mass of the Resurrection for Edna M. Garrigan of Larkspur will be Monday at 10 a.m. at St. Patrick's Church in Larkspur.

She died yesterday in a local hospital following a short illness.

Mrs. Garrigan, 81, was born in Sacramento and moved to Marin five years ago.

She was a member of the Ladies Guild of St. Patrick's Church, Larkspur, and a former member of Most Holy Parish in San Francisco.

Surviving her are a daughter, Lois Tiret of Larkspur; two brothers, Elwood F. Bonner of Southern California and William H. Bonner of Pleasanton; three sisters, Alice G. Braun of San Mateo; Nellie B. Billburg of Southern California and Bonita Bossi of San Francisco. Rosary will be recited at 8 p.m. tomorrow at Carew and English Mortuary, San Francisco. Burial will be at Holy Cross Cemetery, Colma.

IRENE GALE

Irene P. Gale, a 67-year Petaluma resident, died yesterday in Hillcrest Hospital after a long illness.

Mrs. Gale, 76, was a member of the First Baptist Church, Petaluma, for 66 years and of the Corona Club.

A native of Mobile, Mo., she came to California as a child and lived in Los Angeles several years before moving to Petaluma.

She is survived by her husband of 54 years, Wallace P. Gale; three sons, Lewis W., Donald P. and Robert L. Gale, all of Petaluma; two brothers, Milton Penn of San Francisco and August Penn of Concord, and four grandchildren.

Funeral will be Monday at 2 p.m. at Parent Funeral Chapel, Petaluma, with burial at Liberty Cemetery.

Sheriff's Deputies Leave Rock Concert-Goers Alone

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

About 200,000 young people were jammed into a private park for a weekend rock festival at Goose Lake, Mich., more were coming, and Sheriff Charles Southworth had some instructions for his deputies.

"Leave the young people alone," he said. "I don't care what the hell they do once they're in that private park."

"They," by police estimates, were young people from across the Midwest and Canada who had settled down for three days of rock music (21 bands), drugs, wine and some nude swimming at the lake, eight miles from Jackson, Mich.

The festival's promoters had planned for 60,000 people. By midnight Friday, the gates to the park were closed because "we can't handle any more." Drug vendors sold their wares openly inside the 390-acre park but a 400-man private police force confined itself to keeping the peace and watching the 12-foot-high electrified barbed-wire fence so nobody got in free—tickets cost $15 for three days. There were 50 to 60 arrests outside the park on drug charges.

While music lovers were coming to Goose Lake from Canada, many young Americans were crossing the Ambassador Bridge at Detroit on their way to the Strawberry Fields Festival at Mostport, Ont. The exodus from Canada backed up traffic tow miles. Custom inspectors turned 10 young persons over to Detroit police on drug charges.

More than 40,000 gathered at the Canadian festival and another 20,000 were expected. Little marijuana was in evidence—doctors at a 100-bed hospital said most people were using hashish, LSD and "Speed."

Other rock festival notes:

Indiana — A temporary restraining order was granted Friday against a rock festival on a farm near Mooresville. Promoters said they would appeal to the Indiana Supreme Court.

Pennsylvania—The promoters of a 10-hour festival planned for Philadelphia Sunday canceled the festival. Peace, Inc., the sponsors, said it canceled because of strong local and state opposition which made the festival impossible. The cancellation came minutes after a U.S. Appeals Court approved the concert.

In Washington County, a petition will be filed Tuesday against a festival in West Finley Township in Western Pennsylvania Aug. 28-30. Township authorities said that the 20,000 to 30,000 persons expected to attend would jam the two small roads to the area.

Wisconsin—Gov. Warren P. Knowles met with local authorities to prepare plans for controlling a rock festival near Tomahawk Aug. 15.

Oregon—Several festivals are being planned: one in suburban Clackmas County during which the American Legion will hold a rival festival during its convention Aug. 28-Sept. 2, to siphon off protesters, another in Washington County Aug. 14-16, and another in Salem Sept. 5-7.

Hawaii—Honolulu will sponsor its own rock concerts beginning Sunday at Waikiki Shell with free admission. "I think this is a legitimate form of entertainment for our young people," Mayor Frank Fasi said.

Teen-Ager In Car Incident Fatally Shot

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) —A teen-ager was shot to death by police Friday night after a "hot car" allegedly lurched forward and knocked down an officer.

Van Allen Prince, 16, Menlo Park, was dead on arrival at General Hospital after he was hit once in the chest and twice in the leg by gunshots.

The shooting incident occured in the Bayview district, where the suspected stolen car was forced to a stop by a police vehicle.

Officer Gary Frederick of Potrero Station said that as he walked over to talk to the car's occupants, the vehicle bolted forward and knocked him down. Police said he suffered minor injuries.

Several shots followed. Only Prince was hit.

Three other young occupants of the car were held for questioning.

Several observers told reporters the police fired without provocation.

The Romans, while developing the science of bridge building, discovered a natural cement.

Driver Has A Very Bad Day On His Way Down Shoreline

It wasn't a good day at all yesterday for Gary Dean Thompson of San Francisco, involved in two separate auto accidents within an hour on Shoreline Highway in Southern Marin.

Thompson, 34, escaped injury when his vehicle collided with an auto driven by Gregert D. Johnson, 27, of Providence, R.I., at 9 p.m. about three miles south of Olema, the California Highway Patrol reported.

Two passengers in Johnson's vehicle were treated at Marin General Hospital for minor injuries. Yvonne Sasso, 29, of Providence, suffered a foot sprain, and Carol Sasso, 9, also of Providence, suffered a scraped forehead.

The highway patrol said Thompson's vehicle was behind Johnson's as both proceeded south on Shoreline. Johnson stopped to avoid hitting a deer on the road, but Thompson was unable to stop in time, the patrol said.

Thompson was able to drive away from the accident. But an hour later, still on Shoreline, he lost control of his car on a turn and skidded off the road near Stinson Beach. The car overturned.

Thompson was taken to Marin General and treated for a cut chin and lip.

Thomson No Longer Child Center Chief

Former San Rafael High School principal Alfred N. Thomson, now a Terra Linda High School teacher, no longer is president of the Marin Child Development Center in Tiburon.

The I-J erred yesterday in saying he still held the post, when his hospitalization at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco was reported.

Gas Leak Causes Small Blast At High School Gym

A small explosion caused by leaking natural gas blew the door off an electrical switchbox in the boys' gymnasium at Tamalpais High School yesterday, but caused little damage and no injuries.

Gene Malkemus, gas superintendant at Pacific Gas and Electric Co., said the 7:01 a.m. explosion came when gas leaked into a switchbox and was set off by a spark.

An instructor in the gym at the time called the Mill Valley Fire Department, but there was no fire. A PG&E crew shut off the gas line and a plumber was called in to repair the leak.

Mill Valley's Schools Superintendent Stays

James A. Collins, Mill Valley School District Superintendent, yesterday was offered and "enthusiastically" accepted a new four-year contract at $24,000 a year.

The school board held a special meeting yesterday to offer Collins the new contract.

The contract, retroactive to July 1, cancels the last year of Collins's previous four-year contract at $21,000 per year.

Student Poll Varied On Drug Course

RICHMOND (UPI) —Junior high school students respond to a course on drug abuse not as one, but with varying opinions and reactions.

More than 3,000 seventh graders in seven Richmond junior high schools received a 20-hour drug abuse course designed by Lockheed Information Systems. Results were announced Friday.

Asked whether they learned a little, quite a bit, or a lot from the program, 2,069 answered quite a bit or a lot.

To the question of whether they were surprised, shocked or neither, 674 were surprised, 141 shocked and 1,593 neither. A total of 1,912 said the course helped them understand the problems of drug abuse, 178 said no and 420 said they were not sure.

Mary Jean Sheeran, secondary curriculum coordinator for Richmond schools, said the course was designed for junior high ages, when young people are first likely to form an attitude toward drugs, and added the course avoids the "pearchy" approach.

Lockheed Information Systems, a part of Lockheed Missiles and Space Co. in Sunnyvale, introduced its drug decision course 18 months ago. Almost 35,000 students nationally have taken it.

Trial To Decide Long-Hairs' Right To Unemployment

SAN JOSE (UPI) —A federal judge wants a trial to decide whether the state can cut off unemployment benefits to long-haired men.

U.S. Dist. Judge Peckham refused to order California to resume payments to seven men, but he also refused to dismiss their suit.

The long-hairs were denied jobless benefits on grounds they had refused to enhance their employability by getting haircuts.

The youths contend their right to wear long hair is protected by the U.S. Constitution. They asked for an order restoring their unemployment insurance immediately.

Peckham ruled this week that the suit raised "serious legal questions," but that because of "strong state interests that underlie the unemployment insurance program, it may well be that plaintiff's first amendment right to personal adornment can be restricted."

U.C. Professors Advance After All

BERKELEY (UPI) — Two University of California professors whose promotions were blocked by the Board of Regents last month are apparently going to get their advancements after all.

The university announced Friday that Reginald E. Zelnik, assistant professor of history on the Berkeley campus, has been promoted to associate professor, a position which gives him tenure.

The other faculty member, David B. Kaplan, associate professor of philosophy at UCLA, is also in line for promotion to full professor at the regents meeting next month. He already holds tenure.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

Students On 'Right' Are Strong In Numbers But Weak In Voice

DEAR HELEN:

It seems that because of the publicity and noise anti-war students make, most adults assume all young people are far-left and howling for an immediate pull-out American troops in Vietnam and elsewhere.

This isn't so.

There are just as many students on the right (or too apathetic to care either way) as there are on the left, but we don't get our voices heard.

The Young Americans for Freedom has a membership of 50,000 conservative young people, which exceeds that of all "new left" groups combined.

But Jerry Rubin alone gets ten times the publicity of our entire group. — STUDENT ON THE RIGHT

DEAR STUDENT:

My youth mail bears out your statement: It is evenly divided between left and right, war and peace-now, flag-burners and flag-wavers. In fact, those who believe we should be in Vietnam slightly outnumber the ones who feel (as I do) that it's a war we should never have fought.

Here's an example:

DEAR HELEN:

My brother went to war in December, 1968. He told me not to worry because he was strong and brave. When the plane pulled out I couldn't help the tears. He never forgot to write.

Then one day he was missing in action. On June 20, we learned that he had died of third degree burns. I cried my eyes out, but I told myself he died for his country.

Now on television you hear these college kids demonstrating. Don't they know that if we don't fight Communism it will take over and we won't be free any more?

If the Government would let me, I would go and help our soldiers. The ones who are yelling are afraid to lose their lives to keep this country free. — L.A.A.

DEAR HELEN:

It isn't cowardice or selfishness or blindness that makes us carry signs which say, "Support our boys in Vietnam — Bring them Home!" My mother is a member of "Another Mother for Peace." Well, I'm another teen-ager for peace.

If it hadn't been for college demonstrations, we probably wouldn't have the timetable for withdrawal. And if it doesn't work out, there will be more riots. This Vietnam mess has just about ruined a country that used to be (so they tell me) united. And for what? So we could keep on saying, "The U.S. never lost a war!" — N.A.M. (but that doesn't stand for 'Nam.)

Seams Pop With Wrong Thread

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR EUNICE,

I just found out that the reason the seams on my polyester garments "popped" was because I wasn't using polyester thread. Why don't stores alert customers to this kind of problem such as mentioning a new type of thread to be used for new materials?

MRS. J.J. O'R.

DEAR MRS. J.J. O'R.,

The reason your seams "popped" might have been partly due to the type of thread you used. However, there could easily have been other reasons, also. I think perhaps the main reason is that you didn't pull your fabric slightly as you stitched your seams. Also, the tension and stitch setting might not have been correct.

By pulling the fabric slightly, you are giving it the elasticity that is equal to elasticity of the knit fabric and the least amount of strain naturally "popped" the thread. Also, the tension must not be too tight and the machine stitch should be set at 10 to 12 stitches per inch.

If polyester thread is available, it can certainly save you a few added hazards, and I would recommend it wholeheartedly. I must also recommend a new needle in your machine to prevent snagging the knit fabric.

MISS ERLA F. Haas, Duncannon, Pa., is this week's Tailor Trix pressing board winner for her sewing hint:

"When sewing rick-rack, lace or any rows of decorative trim to your skirts ,I have found it to work much easier if I open the zipper closing the slip and skirt or dress over the leaf of the sewing machine. It is now possible to continue sewing around without worrying about catching a spot that you did not wish to catch."

DEAR EUNICE,

I'm just itching to get back to the sewing machine and work on my fall and winter wardrobe. But, I honestly don't know what direction to take. Can you help all of us by giving us a suggestion as to what would be a safe garment to make and to be sure of wearing this year? I know that everyone resists changes, but I can't honestly say I'm too enthusiastic about the longer style clothes.

MRS. E.W.

DEAR MRS. E.W.,

I feel that I'm beginning to sound like a broken record, but I'm still flattered that my readers think so much of my opinion and keep asking me for guidance. If you want to start in a new direction and have been wearing your skirts many inches above your knees, I think perhaps it would be a good idea to at least bring your skirts down to the area of the knees for a new look. You may keep the short look by wearing a tunic top with slacks, also a new look.

There is also the long jumper over the blouses. The jumper is usually buttoned down the front and left open to the knee level, giving you a two-dimension look.

Another new look is the sleeveless coat in the longer length, worn over a short dress or skirt. You can almost take your pick, but let's keep making something beautiful and quit worrying about it.

No matter how beautiful a 10-year-old car looks, who would want it today instead of a new one? Change is inevitable, and we must accept it in degrees. I think most of us will begin with a beautiful new coat that will be several inches longer than our present coats to take care of any change in length. We might suddenly decide that a longer length dress isn't too bad after all!

AMA Offers To Publish Pill Facts

CHICAGO (UPI)—The American Medical Association announced today it will circulate a pamphlet describing the effectiveness—and possible hazards—of birth control pills.

The AMA offered to publish and distribute the pamplet after the Food and Drug Administration required manufacturers to include information about the drug in each package of oral contraceptives.

The pamphlet, "What You Should Know About 'The Pill'," has been prepared by the AMA in cooperation with the FDA and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

Distribution will be free to all doctors who prescribe oral contraceptives, regardless of membership in the AMA.

Dr. Max H. Parrott, Portland, Ore., chairman of the AMA Board of Trustees, told a news conference, "The AMA believes the physician is the proper person to inform the patient about a drug he is prescribing, including any risks involved."

The FDA still will require information to be included in each package, but the AMA said, the information does not need to list blood clots each year among women who did and did not take the pill.

"The estimated death rate from abnormal blood clotting in healthy women under 35 not taking the pill is one in 500,000, whereas for the same group taking the pill it is one in 66,000," the AMA pamphlet says. "For healthy women over 35 not taking the pill, the rate is one in 200,000 compared to one in 25,000 for pill users."

"For these reasons it is important that women who have had blood clots in the legs, lungs or brain not use oral contraceptives," the pamphlet says.

It warns patients who suffer from migraine, fibroids of the uterus, heart or kidney disease, asthma, high blood pressure, diabetes or epilepsy that, "all of these conditions may be made worse by the use of oral contraceptives." The pamphlet says the physician may wish to make special tests to determine if the pill is "safe" for a patient with one of the ailments.

The AMA pamphlet also says, "There is no proof at the present time that oral contraceptives can cause cancer in humans. However, the possibility that they may continues to be studied, based on observations that large doses of female sex hormones have produced cancer in some experimental animals."

Marin Women

Ceramicist Is Co-Op School's President

English-born Mrs. Roger Ahlenius of San Rafael is the new president of the Terra Linda Co-operative Nursery School.

Daphne Ahlenius served as the school's vice president from last January to June.

She attended high school and the College of Art in Birmingham, England, and has taken further courses in ceramics at the College of Marin. She is employed with Heath Ceramics in Sausalito as a glaze technician. She says that her interests include reading, cooking and "all aspects of ceramics."

The wife of a carpenter-contractor, she and her husband are parents of William Sven, 4, and Anna Karin, 2, and enjoys participating on a regular basis at the nursery school, as all the mothers of the children attending are required to do.

Other nursery school officers this year are Mmes. Bruce Hixon, vice president; John Thompson, treasurer; Henry Chazankin, orientation chairman; and Bob Strahle, fund-raising chairman.

THE SUBURBAN SCENE

Bit Of Hawaii At Marin Party

By MOLLY MARIN

The flavor of the Islands will be brought to Marin when the Axel Mikkelsens of Marin Country Club entertain at an Hawaiian party for some 50 guests from Marin on Wednesday at their home.

Guests have been invited to wear casual Hawaiian attire — muu-muus and Aloha shirts — for the cocktail and buffet gathering. The Mikkelsens will have fresh pineapples and flowers flown in especially for the evening, and later Hawaiian entertainers will perform for the guests.

AMONG THE large group of travelers to Europe under sponsorship of the Foreign Study League are six from San Rafael. Spending their summer in Spain, Italy, Austria, France and England are Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Lindberg and their teen-age son and daughter, Ane and Helen Lindberg, and Kathleen Menary and Deborah Moore. The travelers will return to Marin Aug. 30.

COCKTAILS WILL be served to guests at the Belvedere home of Mr. and Mrs. L.W. Colby prior to San Francisco Yacht Club's regatta dinner dance tomorrow.

Their guests will be Mr. and Mrs. William Healy and Mr. and Mrs. G.A. Gast. The two sons and their wives of Mr. and Mrs. Gast, visiting at their parents' Belvedere home this month, will attend.

A DINNER hosted Wednesday by Bill Markey of Kentfield at the London Arms restaurant in San Anselmo was both a farewell party and expression of his deep personal gratitude to Ronald and Patricia De May, also of Kentfield. Some 16 guests attended the dinner and more guests came afterward, including a number of Markey's friends from the Ice Follies.

The De Mays, who are both working at Marin General Hospital — she as a registered nurse and he as a central supplies technician — will leave the end of this month for Humboldt County, where he will continue his studies toward the degree in forest management which he started at the College of Marin. She will continue her career part time.

Markey hosted the party in appreciation of the exceptional care he received from Pat De May, both before and after his nearly fatal illness when he was at Center Medical Hospital, where he met her, and at Marin General Hospital following an eye operation.

MR. AND MRS. William Partridge of Sleepy Hollow were honored with a dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Erickson last Friday. Mr. Partridge will retire in September after 45 years with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in San Francisco, where Mr. Ericson is also employed. Mrs. Partridge is active in the Decoration Guild of the Marin Art and Garden Center.

PATROLMAN COMFORTS WOUNDED JUROR

A California Highway Patrolman comforts juror Marie Graham, shot in the right arm after being abducted from Judge Haley's courtroom. She and two other jurors were taken hostage — together with the judge and Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas — by three armed convicts and an accomplice who made a desperate break for freedom. Judge Haley was killed, as were three of the desperadoes, when the get-away van was blocked and gunfire erupted.

Alameda-Bound Navy Jet Crashes, Crewmen Safe

KREMMLING, Colo. (UPI)— A Navy A3 reconnaissance jet with a four man crew apparently iced up over the central Colorado mountains and crashed 35 miles southwest of here early Friday afternoon.

All four crew members managed to bail out of the twin-engined delta-wing jet.

An Army rescue helicopter from Ft. Carson, Colo., picked up three survivors within several hours of the crash and spotted the fourth survivor at about 10 p.m.

Rescuers had determined that the fourth man was in good enough condition to remain overnight in the rugged mountain country, a spokesman at Fitzsimon General Hospital in Denver said. Four-wheel-drive vehicles would be sent for him this morning, he said.

Only partial identifications were available late Friday. The spokesman said Lt. Bird and Lt. Kaiser were the first to be picked up and spent Friday night at Fitzsimons. Petty Officer Mc Chord was picked up later Friday and flown to an Aspen, Colo., hospital. All were reported in "good" condition.

The fourth crewmember was not identified.

Bird, the pilot, said he would make a statement regarding the crash sometime today when he was assured that the fourth crewmember was safe.

The plane was one of three jets enroute to the Alameda Naval Air Station in California.

TERROR UNFOLDS — Inmate William A. Christmas (left) holds a gun at juror Joyce Rodoni, two other jurors and Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas as law officers stand with raised hands. The scene came as the inmates and an accomplice emerged from Judge Harold J. Haley's courtroom on their daring escape try. Officers at right are Dan Terzich, Mill Valley police chief (with hat); Sheriff's Inspector Harvey Teague (head bowed) and Sheriff's Inspector Kenneth Irving (far right.)

RUSSIAN ORTHODOX SAINT

First Canonization In 100 Years

KODIAK, Alaska (UPI)—The Russian Orthodox Church canonizes its first saint in a century this week—a Russian monk who was never a priest but who brought the church to the new world.

Some of the highest-ranking members of the church's American branch are attending the four-day ceremony which concludes tomorrow.

The celebrant is Archbishop Ireney, primate of the Orthodox Church of America, founded 175 years ago by a simple monk named Herman.

Although he refused to be elevated to the rank of priest, the monk was known as "Father Herman" by his peers and fondly referred to as "APA"—beloved grandfather—by his Aleutian congregation.

Despite opposition from civil authorities, Father Herman championed fair treatment for the Alaskan natives long before supporting a minority cause became popular.

He was among eight monks selected for mission work in Alaska, then owned by the Russians, by direct order of Empress Catherine in 1794.

The Christian missionaries, the first to be sent overseas by Russia, traveled an arduous 7,327 miles from St. Petersburg, arriving in Kodiak Sept. 24, 1794.

Conflicts flared almost at once between the newly arrived clergy and Russian traders over the cruel treatment of the natives. When the Kodiak mission protested such treatment, the hostility intensified.

Father Herman withdrew to nearby Spruce Island in about 1810 for relief from the anti-clerical actions of those in the trading company. He called the mist-haunted, exquisitely green island "New Valaamo" after a beloved monastery on Lake Ladoga in Finland.

The monk built Alaska's first orphanage on the island for children of Aleuts killed hunting the sea otter's luxurious pelts for the ruthless Russian traders or who died from disease brought by the outsiders.

He also taught the inhabitants gardening in what has been called "Alaska's first agricultural experimental station," demonstrating the efficacy of the seaweed kelp for fertilizer.

By 1825, only Father Herman remained of the original group. One monk was killed by mistrusting natives, three drowned when a ship went down on a return trip from Siberia, two returned to Russia, and Monk Ioasaf, a special friend of Father Herman's, died at Kodiak in 1823.

The humble monk lived in semi-seclusion on New Valaamo until his death on Dec. 13, 1837 at the age of 80.

Today the Alaskan Russian Orthodox Church membership is composed 99 per cent of natives—Aleuts, Eskimos and Indians. Services in many of the churches are conducted in the old Slavic language.

Baptist Professor To Study At Cambridge

Dr. Fred L. Fisher, professor of New Testament Interpretation at Golden Gate Baptist Seminary at Strawberry, left this week for sabbatical studies at Cambridge University in England.

Accompanied by his wife, Fisher will also attend a membership meeting of the Studiorum Novi Testamenti Societas which will be held Aug. 24-28 at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

He will spend the fall and spring working with Cambridge Professor C. F. D. Moule in the area of research and writing. Two of the writing projects include portions of a one-volume Bible commentary to be published by Broadman Press. His assignment will be to write the segment on the book of Romans, First and Second Corinthians.

He also hopes to write a textbook on New Testament theology and to begin at least one volume of a series on Jesus and his teachings.

Following the studies at Cambridge, Fisher will do study-travel in the Near East to visit the sites of the ancient churches of Asia Minor and the Holy Land.

The Fishers will return to the Strawberry campus in July 1971.

Lutheran Assembly Approves Modified Racial Resolution

EVIAN, Finland (LWF) — A considerably modified resolution on racial discrimination in Lutheran churches was approved in the closing hours of the Fifth Assembly of the Lutheran World Federation.

Clearly a compromise between those who wanted to express the concerns of black Africans and those who feared to offend the white churches of South Africa, the resolution stated two principles:

In the Lutheran Church, members of all races should be willing at all times to receive communion together and the Lutheran churches should oppose the principles and practices of racial discrimination and segregation.

An earlier version of the resolution, presented by the Policy and Reference Committee, had spoken of "apartheid." However, this was changed to "racial discrimination" in the version approved by the assembly.

The second part of the resolution recommended to the new Executive Committee of the LWF that it send a delegation "to churches where the above principles constitute a special problem to urge them to bring their racial practices into conformity with the principles of Christian fellowship as rapidly as possible."

And it was further stated that "in order to encourage the quest for equal justice the two principles shall serve as criteria in providing assistance to churches."

The initial version of the official resolution had specified that the delegation be sent "to Lutheran churches in the Republic of South Africa." Also it had asked that LWF funds be channeled to non-white African churches "to provide the economic and spiritual support they so desperately need in their quest for equal justice."

Several attempts to delete the whole concept of a delegation were beaten down.

LWF president-elect Mikko Juva, who chaired the Policy and Reference Committee, finally declared that proposed amendments were making the resolution "milder and milder." He insisted the resolution gave the Executive Committee the clear responsibility for acting on the principles which all had agreed on.

The resolution was prompted by black members of the assembly who maintained that the assembly by its silence was giving "tacit approval to the unholy conditions which exist among the races of South Africa." It spoke of "human atrocities being committed in the Republic of South Africa reducing non-white peoples to sub-human status." It urged that the LWF constituency be appraised of these facts.

The black members also asked that no assistance be given to the white Lutheran churches in South Africa until they are willing to commune with their black brothers and put forth a program opposing the principles and practices of apartheid.

Of the eleven Lutheran churches in South Africa four are white of which two are LWF members; of the three churches in South-West Africa one is white (all three belong to the LWF).

Even the resolution in its revised form provoked the charge of interference with member churches. One opponent charged the LWF with "assuming the position of a super-church."

However, there was a strong desire on the part of many delegates to take specific actions and not simply pass "pious resolutions." The wide margin by which the implementing action passed indicated that the sending of a delegation was seen as a positive way of helping the churches move.

An Ecumenical School Slated

Plans were announced this week for an ecumenical vacation church school, Aug. 17-27, at the First Presbyterian Church of San Rafael.

Sessions at the church, Fifth Avenue and E Street, will be held daily from 9:30 a.m. to noon.

Registration for the school will close tomorrow.

New Book On Jesus Termed 'Magnificent'

By LOUIS CASSELS UPI Religion Writer

What was Jesus really like? What is the distinctive character of the way of life he commended to men by precept and example?

Thousands of books have been written in answer to those questions. Most are pretty bad. A few are fairly good. A very, very few are magnificent.

In the latter category is a small, inexpensive paperback published recently (by Macmillan). It is entitled, "The Founder of Christianity." The author is Prof. F. H. Dodd of Cambridge University, who directed the translation of the New English Bible, and who is regarded by many as the world's foremost New Testament scholar.

In this little book, Dodd has used his enormous erudition the way it should be used: to make deep things clear and easy to understand.

Lesser scholars have argued for years over which parts of the gospels may be regarded as actual sayings of Jesus and which parts may be interpretations or interpolations by the early Church. Dodd cuts straight through this maze of quibbling to answer the one question of urgent importance to the confused layman who is wondering whether the New Testament presents an authentic picture of a real person and his teachings.

His answer is an unqualified yes.

The gospels, Dodd says, "offer a body of sayings on the whole so consistent, so coherent, and withal so distinctive in manner, style, content, that no reasonable critic should doubt, whatever reservations he may have about individual sayings, that we find reflected here the thought of a single, unique teacher."

The distinctive "style" of Jesus, reflected in his record teachings, is "crisp, pungent, often allusive, even cryptic, laden with irony and paradox," he says. It betrays "a mind whose processes were swift and direct, hitting the nail on the head without waste of words." Jesus's sayings made clear that he had a keen sense of humor, a love of nature, and a poetic imagination.

The narrative portions of the gospels reveal other pronounced personality traits. Jesus's relations with people were invariably characterized by a "sensitive response" to their needs. "he was drawn to those who were sick in mind or body, because they needed help that he could give."

Plans For Tent Crusade Next Month Are Announced

A group of Marin County Christians of different races, denominations, and points of view will conduct meetings in a tent at the Corte Madera Shopping Center Sept. 13 - 27.

Rev. Fred Small, director, and Father Tod Ewald, co-director, said this week they have met with enthusiastic response for this Triple I-C Crusade 70s, which stands for Inter-Denominational Interracial Involved for Christ in the 70's.

As it is being structured, Crusade 70's offers the public an opportunity to participate in these meetings which will allow blacks, whites, the young, the old, the rich and the poor to gather together in a natural, non-political atmosphere in order to achieve better understanding and communication.

The very unlikeliness of a "tent meeting" for the common purpose of worshipping God with a program which involves participation by all denominations, representing all forms of worship is exciting and unique according to them.

Anyone interested in participating in Crusade 70's may get further details by calling Small or Ewald.

Novato Churches Set Bible School

St. Francis Episcopal Church and Grace Lutheran Church of Novato will hold a joint vacation Bible school Aug. 17-28.

Registration will be held opening day at Grace Lutheran. Classes are open for kindergarten through sixth grade children.

Classes for kindergarten, first and second grades will be held at Grace Lutheran while third through sixth graders will meet in Collins Hall at St. Francis.

Guest Will Fill Pulpit Tomorrow

Jerry Bruton, member of the United Methodist Church in Novato, will be guest speaker at the church's 8:30 and 10:55 a.m. services tomorrow.

His topic will be "Good Medicine," on subject matter taken from one of the late Rev. Peter Marshall's sermons.

Rev. Steven L. Darling, pastor, is on vacation and laymen are filling the pulpit on Sundays during his absence.

Teen Dance Tonight

The Rohnert Park Recreation Department will sponsor a dance for teen-agers from 8 to 11 p.m. today at the Rohnert Park Junior High School. Music will be provided by the Bronze Hog.

FIRST SCIENTIFIC ATTEMPT

World Of The Spirit Explored

LONDON (Toronto Telegram News Service) — The first known scientific attempt to make a study of the world of the spirit is being undertaken at Oxford University.

In order to gather as much material as possible, an appeal is being made to men and women all over the world who have undergone any sort of religious experience to write and tell Sir Alister Hardy its precise nature.

Together with his team of workers at the new Religious Experience Unit at Manchester College, Oxford, Sir Alister wants to delve into the faith of man.

"Our main aim is to build up a body of knowledge about religious experience in the present-day world which we hope will demonstrate whether or not it does in fact form, as I believe, an important part of the make-up of man. Something which may perhaps be psychologically as fundamental as is sex, but much less understood," he says.

"I would like to contact all those who have been conscious of and perhaps influenced by, some such power, whether they call it the power of God or not, to write a simple and brief account of these feelings and their effects."

The research unit also intends studying ecstatic or mystical experiences.

Experimental work is being carried out in the field of extra-sensory perception. And when the study is more fully underway, experts in Oriental languages will delve into experiences from some of the religions of the East.

"If this power is as I believe — common to all mankind — then such studies may be a contribution, if only in a small way, towards an ultimate universal faith," says Sir Alister.

Explaining the reasons for establishing the research unit, Professor Hardy said: "Few will deny that in the past religion has been one of the most powerful influences moulding human behavior in the course of history.

"Many people ask if our civilization can survive without it.

"How much may the destructive unrest of modern youth be attributed to a belief that the spiritual side of the universe is an illusion? Or to the belief that scientists have dismissed the spiritual side as being nothing more than a superstition from the past which we should outgrow?"

Sir Alister believes, too, that the unconsciously frustrated desire for spiritual experience is just as important and causes as much unhappiness as does unconsciously-frustrated sex.

"I think it is likely that the religious urge is as much a part of man's natural history as is sex, but whose springs are much less understood," he says.

Because of his beliefs, he has set up his research unit to make a systematic study of religious experience in the modern world.

"Science cannot be concerned with the inner essence of religion, just as it cannot deal with the nature of art or the poetry of human love.

"However, we can make a systematic and scientific study of the records of man's religious experience and by so doing, after a long study, help towards a better understanding of it," he says.

The research unit intends to sift carefully through the accounts of religious experience sent in, and then to probe further into the more interesting and revealing cases.

The distilled results will be translated into a form of questionnaire. After that a sample of population the different parts of Britain, and possibly other Western countries, will be asked whether they have undergone similar experiences or feelings.

Sir Alister, who is emeritus professor of zoology at Oxford and formerly a lecturer on science, natural history and religion at Aberdeen University, hopes that the eventual findings of his research unit might lead to a more experimental approach to religion. He also hopes that people who are sceptical might be persuaded to approach the power of religion in order to find a better way of life for themselves.

Says the professor: "I believe they would find that it gave results.

"Religion could become animated by a more vital and dynamic faith than one which rests mainly upon the acceptance of dogmas from the past.

"It would truly become an experimental faith.

"Even if the cracking of civilization through the suppression of the religious forces which have built it up and sustained it appears to be only a remote possibility, is it not worth finding out a little more about them before it may be too late?

"We hope to persuade the intellectual world that experiences of some power beyond the self, which many people have felt, appear to form some fundamental part of man's nature which may indeed help him in his actions."

Grid Openers: Rookies On Spot, Stars On Sidelines

By BILL MADDEN
UPI Sports Writer

College football's "Bright Young Seniors of 1969" will face the first tests of their professional careers with their new teams today as the National Football League begins 1970 combat with 10 preseason games.

From this point on the Saturday heroes of the collegiate gridiron will no longer be judged by lost year's press clippings. The Steve Owenses, Mike Phippses and Mike McCoys will be asked to live up to their advance billing.

Meanwhile as the rookies advance front and center, a few of their predecessors, who passed the college to pro test with flying colors, are grabbing the headlines by their absence.

Joe Namath of the New York Jets, Joe Kapp of the Minnesota Vikings, and Lance Alworth of the San Diego Chargers—all of whom reached the pinnacle of success as pros after equally brilliant college careers—have served notice to their employers that they will not be there for the opening bell.

Namath told the New York Jets that he has problems and can't get involved over football at the moment. Kapp found his employer somewhat less than sympathetic to his salary demands and elected to leave what has been offered him rather than take it. Alworth claims that his bosses—the San Diego Chargers—reneged on a loan agreement and so he, too, is hanging it up. Whether or not the three reconsider their decisions remains to be seen. In the meantime, they're doing an excellent job in creating advance notice for the forthcoming season.

While Namath remains in New York to mull his problems, the Jets will meet the Buffalo Bills at Birmingham, Ala., in a game that was originally billed as somewhat of a homecoming for the celebrated "Broadway Joe," who played at the University of Alabama. With Namath not present, the Jets will get a good look at second-year man Al Woodall and newcomer Harry Theofilidies in addition to veteran Babe Parilli.

Kapp's absence will give the Vikings a chance to test Bill Cappleman, one of the "Bright Young Men" who set a host of passing records at Florida State the past two seasons. The Vikings, who will take on the New Orleans Saints in the annual Hall of Fame game at Canton, Ohio, will also be keeping a close eye on their top draft choice, defensive tackle John Ward of Oklahoma State.

With Alworth out of the starting lineup, the Chargers will go with Walker Gillette, the club's number one draft choice from Richmond University, against Dallas. The Cowboys will be without the services of their All-Pro defensive end George Andrie, who joined the fast-growing list of retired pros Friday when he too failed to see eye to eye over his value to his employers.

In another game on the West Coast, the Cleveland Browns will meet the Los Angeles Rams. The Browns will have their first opportunity to find out if Purdue's All-American quarterback Mike Phipps was worth sacrificing All-Pro receiver Paul Warfield. The Rams will get a look at one of 1968's class of young stars in Jim Seymour, who spent last season in the military service after a brilliant career as a wide receiver at Notre Dame. Tennessee linebacker Jack Reynolds will also come under the close scrutiny of Rams' head coach George Allen.

Cincinnati's new Riverfront Stadium will get its first taste of pro football when interim coach Bill Austin brings the Washington Redskins to town to meet the Cincinnati Bengals. Austin, who is filling in for the ailing Vince Lombardi, will pay close attention to defensive end Bill Brundage from Colorado.

The New York Giants and the Green Bay Packers continue their annual pre-season affair at newly expanded Lambeau Field. The Giants have a pair of new linebackers in Wayne Meylan, acquired from Cleveland, and Jim Files, their No. 1 draft choice from Oklahoma. The Packers will get their first look at Notre Dame's Mike McCoy, the huge defensive tackle they hope will be able to

An Eerie Thing About Willie Mays

The trouble with Willie Mays is that, 6 out of every 10 times at bat, he's mortal. A total of 6,800 times in his career, he's had to go back to the bench with only a pop-up, ground-out or strikeout to show for his efforts. Heck, he's only scored 1,892 runs. Some nights, he goes only 1-for-4.

He's only stolen 309 bases. Some years, he gets caught as many as four times.

You take, like, Babe Ruth is almost 100 home runs ahead of him. Some pitchers have no trouble holding him to a single. Over 1,200 times he's had to settle for a base-on-balls. Three guys are ahead of him in total bases, and only two of them are dead.

I mention this because, otherwise, the temptation might be to think Willie Mays was really Peter Pan. Or Sir Lancelot. Or that the Giants found him under the bullrushes one day. You would be tempted to follow him at night to see if he disappeared when he took the glass cleats off. Or flies over tall buildings with a cape.

Should Be 39 Years Old By Now

The eerie thing about Willie Mays is that he should be 39 years old by now. I mean, if you compute time by human reckoning. He should be reading with glasses. His signature should begin to have wavy lines. You might even expect him to misjudge a fly ball now and then, throw to a wrong base. His teeth should hurt, his hair should gray. That body should have some fat on it. The eyes should have pouches under them. You'd think his feet would be killing him.

An angel of the Lord should appear at the clubhouse some night and say, "Okay, Willie, the Boss says that's enough. You're to come with me."

Certain creatures don't age. Or, if they do, they do slowly. Giant Silurian sea turtles and Giant center fielders.

Willie Mays of 1970 went to bat in Dodger Stadium the other night and, from the front row of boxes, it could have been Willie Mays of 1951. The same trim, tight-suited body that looks as if it is running when it is just standing still, the same high-pitched squeaky little boy's voice.

A Dart Through The Mona Lisa

The pitch hit him in the small of the back, and the pitcher, Don Sutton, looked on in horror as if he had just thrown a dart through the Mona Lisa or cracked a statue of St. Francis with a rock.

Pitchers are supposed to stand there with a sneer when they plunk a batter. The more he writhes, the more unconcerned they're supposed to look. Don Sutton ran up like a Red Cross nurse. The crowd — a Dodger crowd, mind you — booed him. Some thought they should arrest him.

When Willie Mays first came to San Francisco as the Giants got moved there, you could see it was an agnostic town by the way it resented him. (The author, Charlie Einstein, once wondered, "what kind of town is it that cheers Khrushchev and boos Willie Mays?") It, San Francisco, seemed to think he should catch fly balls out in the bay, hit home runs over into the Farallones, and stop storms at sea with a wave of his hand. He got 5,613 total bases in 9,850 times at bat which means, with walks, that he gets a base seven out of every nine times at bat. In the outfield, veteran baseball reporters took to automatically marking an "8" in the score book on EVERYTHING hit to center field or 100 feet in either direction therefrom.

20-Year-Old Kid From Alabama

In the interests of psychic phenomena rather than baseball, I went down to see Willie Howard Mays Jr. in the locker room the other night. I thought I might catch him putting on a wig, touching up the eyes. Maybe there would be a corset. Lampblack for the sideburns.

There was only this 20-year-old kid from Alabama. Running around, snapping towels, laughing. Made you wonder if you were doing the right thing giving them the vote. "Uh, how's the eyesight?" I asked lamely.

"Fine, fine," squeaked Willie. "I can pick up the ball just fine." (He hit a breaking ball 10 rows up in the bleachers in the WRONG field a half hour later.)

"Is the game fun?" I ask. (EVERYBODY asks him that.) "So far," said Willie joyously. Since "so far" is the first 20 years, I could see I was dealing with a spirit not a man.

So I know that when Willie is through, he'll just disappear and never be heard from again. And he won't go to the Hall of Fame, he'll ascend into it from a rock in Golden Gate park.

Little Leaguer's Masterpiece

Jeff Knotts, his fastball overpowering and his control precise, humbled Sacramento's district champion Washington of Broderick on two hits last night to give the San Rafael American League All-Stars a 2-0 victory and a berth in today's finals of the Northern California Section II Little League baseball tournament at Rancho School in Novato.

Knotts, who scored the winning run in the first inning on a wild pitch, struckout 13 batters and walked one as he fashioned his second tournament shutout in less than a week. Last Saturday he blanked Marinwood in the District Three finale, 14-0.

UNEARNED RUNS

In gaining a chance to play Concord today at 3 p.m., the Americans lacked the awesome power they used in storming to the Marin County title. That no doubt was because the pitcher they faced last night, Richard Turney, was a good deal better than anyone else they've faced. He gave up only four hits, and both runs off him were unearned.

But if Turney was magnificent in defeat, Knotts was unbelievable in victory. For three innings he pitched perfect ball, striking out the first five men he faced and eight of the first nine. He allowed only one man to reach second base, and only one ball. Ed Gueret's single in the fourth, to be hit to the outfield. The other hit off him was by Ryan DuBois in the fifth.

CASH IN

Opportunity knocked twice for San Rafael in the form of Washington errors in the first and sixth, and the Americans cashed in both times. Knotts, who later doubled but was picked off second, laced a single to left with two out in the first that got by leftfielder Steve Cabrerra for a two base error. The tall hurler dashed home moments later on a wild pitch for what stood up as the winning run.

In the last inning Washington, which defeated Oak Park Wednesday night for the right to come here, hammered its own coffin shut with two more costly misques. After San Rafael rightfielder Dan Helms roped a single to left with two out, Knotts hit what appeared to be an easy ground ball to second base. Gueret bobbled it, however, and then threw it away at third allowing Helms to score.

Earlier that inning Gueret had made a spectacular double play.

Another overflow crowd was expected at Rancho for today's Section title match. Santa Rosa, which lost to Concord Thursday night, 9-4, was to play Washington in the consolation game at 1 p.m.

Bouton Says He Omitted Sexy Parts From Book

By DONALD B. THACKREY

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Jim Bouton, author of the fastest-selling—and the sexiest—sports book of all time, says there were probably "sighs of relief" when major league players read "Ball Four."

"When they read the excerpts they probably thought back and said to themselves 'I wonder if he used that incident?' But I don't have any named guys getting in the sack with a chick. No one is going to have to get a divorce over this book. When they read the book there were probably sighs of relief.

"The sportswriters were harsh on the book, probably because they had to explain to their wives. Can't you hear the wife saying, 'I didn't know the stewardesses stayed in the same hotels as the ball players. Why didn't you tell me that?' "

Bouton's book, published by World Publishing Co. of Cleveland, has sold more than 150,000 copies, is on the best seller lists and is still selling fast. Few sports books in the past have sold more than 200,000 copies during their entire history.

Bouton calls "Ball Four" a "humorous account of baseball."

"I think it's too funny to get mad about," he said.

The knuckleball pitcher, recently sent down from the Houston Astros to the Oklahoma City 89ers because he had become ineffective, said he first thought about writing a book when he was 19 years old and was away from home for the first time playing professional baseball. He said he was struck by the gap between what he had been told about a ball player's life and the actuality.

"I thought I might write it when I got to be a big star," he said, "But I can't wait any longer."

Bouton explained one reaction to the book on his 1969 season with Houston, which he wrote in conjunction with editor Leonard Schecter.

"I overheard my seven-year-old son, Mike, telling a friend, 'My daddy wrote a book and we may have to move because of it.' That's when I decided I had to get the kids together and tell them about the book."

Other Bouton comments at a news conference Friday in San Francisco before the pitcher-author flew to Evansville, Ind. ("Would you believe Evansville?"), where he will pitch for the 89ers, probably Saturday.

On high salaries for professional athletes:

"We are just saying if all this money is being made, we should make it. We don't need the owners. There is only one guy who can field at third base like Brooks Robinson. There are 100,000 like any owner."

On the baseball books of former St. Louis and Cincinnati pitcher Jim Brosnan:

"Terrific. I enjoyed them. They opened my eyes. That's one reason you will find so much conversation in my book. That's what I liked about Brosnan's—he had lots of conversation."

About baseball writers being banned from the Houston bus for a time:

"We were not doing well and it had to be the writers because it couldn't be us. Incidentally, we played .500 ball while the writers were banned."

About former New York Yankee star Mickey Mantle:

"The book is 400 pages long and there is a page and a half on Mantle. I had played with him for some years, he is a superstar and didn't feel I could ignore him."

About the minor leagues:

"The majors have a lot of rules about not signing autographs during games and other things. In the minors the park is like a county fair. You have a much warmer relationship with the fans. In some of these new parks, the fans are so high and so far away that the game is just a rumor."

Sharon To Defend National Tennis Title Next Week

Sharon Walsh of San Rafael returns to Philadelphia next week to defend the U.S. Lawn Tennis Association national junior championship she won there last year.

Since then the 18-year-old, 1970 graduate of San Rafael High School has increased her dominance of junior tennis to cover the world. She won the prestigous All-England tennis tournament's junior division at Wimbledon last month.

Sharon will be a hands-down favorite to claim the crown again. The girl she beat in the finals last year, her long-time friend Gail Hansen of Palo Alto, is too old to compete this time.

ASTROS SNAP S.F. STREAK

Giant 'Kiddie Brigade' Is Spanked

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Just when the San Francisco Giants had their offensive rolling in nigh gear the Kiddie Brigade got out-flanked.

It happened Friday night at Candlestick Park as the Houston Astros shelled Ron Bryant, Don Carrithers, Rich Robertson and Mike Davison for 14 hits enroute to an 11-2 rout that snapped the Giants' win streak at four.

Manager Charlie Fox, who has seen a lot of baseball adversity in his time, took the defeat as hard as any.

START OVER

"The kids disappointed me," said the Giants skipper. "I really thought we had something going and now we have to start all over again."

Larry Dierker, a 20-game winner last year who has been struggling this year to keep his head above water, stopped the Giants on six hits, three by Bobby Bonds and two by Kenny Henderson, in Friday night's game. Dierker, who evened his record at 10-10, struck out five Giants and walked four.

The victory was only the second in the last 14 starts for Dierker, who can't explain what has happened to him this year.

"I'm pitching the same as I did last year and yet I'm not getting the same results," said Dierker. "I simply can't explain it and neither can anyone else on our club. All I can do is go out there and keep on trying."

Doug Rader, who generally murders the Giants, got Dierker off to a running start by drilling a three-run homer in the first. The blow came off Bryant, who got only one man out in the inning and suffered his fifth loss in eight decisions.

Three of the Houston hits were off Bryant. Carrithers gave up four in 3-2-3 innings, Robertson was touched for three in two frames and Davison for four in three innings. All four pitchers have earned run averages well over 5.00, which is not winning ball.

3,000-Mile Trip Proves Profitable For Golfer

AKRON, Ohio (UPI)—Tom Shaw's 3,000-mile trip for a golf lesson is paying big dividends.

The ever-smiling Shaw failed to make the cut in last weekend's Westchester Classic, so he flew to his hometown, Milwaukee, Ore., to find out what was wrong with his game.

Shaw fired a four-under-par 66 Friday to grab a share of the halfway lead in the American Golf Classic with George Archer, both at four-under 136 at the Firestone Country Club.

"I was hitting it short and crooked," Shaw said, "so I went to Howard Bonar to find out what was wrong."

Bonar is the club pro at the Waverly Country Club at Milwaukee, a suburb of Portland.

MORE FUN

"This is a lot more fun playing like this," Shaw said. "You know I haven't seen you guys (newsmen) for a while."

Shaw's last tour victories were the 1969 Doral and Avco tournaments.

"Those were the only times I was in the top ten last year," Shaw said.

"I can't explain that. Maybe I have to get real good before I get consistent," he said laughingly.

Shaw ripped the 7,180-yard par 70 Firestone Country Club course for seven birdies and three bogeys.

SWINGING LEADER — Tom Shaw (above) tied George Archer for lead in American Golf Classic yesterday. (UPI Telephoto)

Archer, winless on the tour since his 1969 Masters victory, shot a consistent 69 Friday to go with his first round 67.

"I was a little shaky coming in," Archer said. "I had to save several pars with several good putts.

MORE ROLL

"I've never played well here, except in the fall during the TV matches when the fairways are hard and you get more roll," he said. "I'm not going to be putting for many birdies when I have to hit a wood or a long iron into the green.

"Right now, I think it's playing as short as I've seen, just like it was fall," Archer said.

The day's best round was turned in by Frank Beard who had a five-under 65 to come within one shot of the course record. Beard's round gave him a 138 total and a fourth place tie with Tommy Aaron who had his second straight 69.

All alone in third place was Westchester Classic Champion Bruce Crampton at 137. He had a two-under par 68 Friday to go with an opening round 69.

Julius Boros, Tommy Jacobs and defending champion Ray Floyd were grouped in the next spot at 139.

Floyd, who shot an even par 70 Thursday, was three-under-par coming into the 17th hole Friday, but three-putted both 17 and 18 to finish with a 69.

THREE-PUTTS

"That's six three-putts I've had in 36 holes," Floyd said. "I'm not very pleased."

Both Jack Nicklaus and Gary Player made comebacks Friday, Nicklaus getting a 67 and Players a 68, to give both of them an even par 140. Others in at 140 were Dave Stockton, Paul Harney, John Miller, Kel Nagel and John Schroeder.

At 141 were Dale Douglass, Lou Graham, Larry Hinson, Phil Rodgers and Tom Weiskopf.

A total of 73 golfers, who made the cut of 148, in the $150,000 tournament, will tee off in today's third round. First place is worth $30,000 with $17,100 for second and $10,650 for third.

Good Omen For Pittsburgh, Utility Man Wrecks Mets

By VITO STELLINO
UPI Sports Writer

The Pittsburgh Pirates hope it's a good omen when they get a homer in a crucial series from a utility infielder who never hits homers.

Last year when the New York Mets won the National League pennant, Al Weis hit only two homers during the regular season—but they came on consecutive days in July and helped beat the Chicago Cubs. He then hit a third homer in the fifth and final game of the World Series against Baltimore.

The Pirates hope that their counterpart to Weis this year is a little guy named Fred Patek. In the lineup only because Gene Alley is injured, Patek hit a three-run homer to cap a five-run sixth inning Friday night and the Pirates went on to beat the Mets 6-1 in the first game of a four-game series.

GUARANTEED LEAD

The victory moved the Pirates 3½ games ahead of the Mets in the East Division and it guaranteed that the Pirates will still be in first place at the end of the Met series, regardless of how the other three games come out.

Patek is hitting .477 in his last 18 games since Alley has been sidelined with a sore heel and a weak bat but he doesn't even want to hit anymore homers.

"That's my first homer this year and I hope it's my last. They're too much trouble. I'd rather just hit line drives. I don't get paid for those homers. When I hit one, then I start thinking about them and I don't want to do that," he said.

Willie Stargell, who does get paid for hitting homers, started the Pirate sixth inning rally with a homer that snapped a 1-1 tie. Bob Robertson and Manny Sanguillen then hit one-out singles and after Bill Mazeroski popped up for the second out, winning pitcher Bob Moose doubled in a run. Ron Taylor then replaced Jim McAndrew and Patek, the smallest player in the majors at 5-foot-4 inches, greeted him with his three-run shot.

HITLESS STRING

Moose, who threw a no-hitter against the Mets last September and took a string of 11 hitless innings against the Mets into the game, ran the streak to 64 innings and wound up with a four-hitter.

It was the fifth straight complete game by the Pirate pitching staff—from Bob Veale, Luke Walker, Dock Ellis, Bruce Dal Canton and Moose. This has been a major factor in the Pirate surge since their pitching has been a question mark.

CUBS FALL

In other games, Philadelphia beat Chicago 4-1, St. Louis nipped Montreal 2-1, Cincinnati edged Los Angeles 4-2, Houston routed San Francisco 11-2 and Atlanta beat San Diego 8-2 but lost the second game 6-1.

Chicago fell 5½ games behind Pittsburgh by losing to the Phils. Tony Taylor singled home two runs to snap a 1-1 tie and start a three-run eighth inning for the Phils. Grant Jackson won his third game with relief help from Dick Selma. Ferguson Jenkins, 13-13, took the loss.

The Cincinnati Reds extended their lead to 13 games over the Dodgers in the West with the come-from-behind triumph over the Dodgers. Trailing 2-1, the Reds took the lead when Lee May doubled in two runs in the eighth with the bases loaded. Tommy Helms' sacrifice fly produced an insurance run.

fill at least one of the spots on the defensive front four which has been weakened by the retirements of Willie Davis and Henry Jordan.

The Detroit Lions, who will host the world champion Kansas City Chiefs, are likely to have a noted absentee. Veteran defensive tackle Alex Karras didn't report to camp until Friday because of a contract hassle. The Lions have Heisman Trophy winner Steve Owens to concentrate on as backfield aid for the oft-injured Mel Farr and Nick Eddy.

The Miami Dolphins will get their first look at quarterback Bob Griese since his knee injury sidelined him midway through the 1969 season, but Griese won't have Paul Warfield to throw to. The Dolphins, who engage the Pittsburgh Steelers at Jacksonville, Fla., have been unsuccessful in satisfying Warfield's salary demands after acquiring the speedy receiver from Cleveland for their number one draft pick. The Steelers, meanwhile, will unveil another quarterback in the person of Terry Bradshaw—everybody's "can't miss" in the class of '69.

Don McCafferty will make his debut as head coach of the Baltimore Colts as his charges invade the Oakland Raiders. No new faces grabbing the fans eyes here thought—it's still Johnny Unitas, the Colts' legendary quarterback, who draws the attention.

The Houston Oilers will get the first returns on the trade that exchanged quarterbacks with St. Louis. Charlie Johnson, the new man at the Oilers' helm, will test the revamped Chicago Bears defense. Biggest additions to the Bears are linebacker Lee Roy Caffey and defensive end Bill Staley.

Softballers Get Good, Bad News

Both good and bad news was received yesterday by the Sohner Tree Service softball team, of San Anselmo, winner of the Tri-County District Tournament this week for the third time in the last six years.

On the bright side, tournament officials announced that the Marin club had swept all three individual awards and had placed six men on the all-tournament team.

Jess Munyon won the award for most valuabe pitcher, Ron McCamish was named the most valuable fielder and Ron Blum was picked as the most valuable hitter.

Ed Schulze (lb), Doug Wilson (cf), Art Donati (rf), Munyon (p), McCamish (2b) and Blum (ss) were named to the all-tournament squad.

Ron Baldwin (c) and Ray Allena (3b) from Petaluma's Greyview Farms also made the club.

On the debit side, it was learned that Sohner might have to enter the State Tournament in Napa next week without the services of Munyon and catcher John Brookman.

Munyon damaged the thumb on his pitching hand and Brookman suffered some badly bruised ribs when the Sohner and Greyview teams exchanged blows in a wild melee during Wednesday's title game.

Sohner officials took advantage of the American Softball Association rule permitting the addition of two players before the state tourney by adding pitchers Morey Swarm and Walt Tyler to the roster.

Swarm has pitched for Sohner in past years. Tyler hurls for Guanella Floors of Santa Rosa.

Final tournament standings:
1. Sohner Tree Service, San Anselmo
2. Greyview Farms, Petaluma
3. Pacific View, Sonoma
4. Young American Homes, Santa Rosa
5. Guanella Floors, Santa Rosa
6. Mertle Chevron, Santa Rosa
7. Santa Rosa Merchants, Santa Rosa

Ken Stabler In Limelight As Raiders Host Baltimore

OAKLAND (UPI) —Southpaw quarterback Ken Stabler, entering his third season with Oakland, makes only his second game appearance tonight when the Raiders meet Baltimore in a pre-season contest at 8 o'clock.

Stabler, an All-America from Alabama University, was injured throughout his rookie season of 1968. He fired a pair of touchdown passes in a rookie game against Dallas last season, then suddenly walked out of camp to attend to "personal matters."

Now he's back to try and earn the reserve quarterback job behind Daryle Lamonica. Stabler will try out the role before a sellout crowd of nearly 53,000 at the Oakland Coliseum as Lamonica is expected to play all or most of the first half.

BEST RECORD

Most Oakland veterans will go to the bench early. The Raiders traditionally use exhibition games as opportunities for rookies and backup players to show their worth. During the regular season, Oakland has had the best record in pro football over the last three years.

While the Raiders take a close look at such players as rookie running back Ted Koy, young tight ends Lloyd Edwards and Ray Chester, linebacker Gerald Irons and defensive lineman Art Thoms, Baltimore will be trying to score a victory in addition to evaluating its younger talent.

The Colts have lost only two pre-season games over the last five years. But after winning all six last year, they slipped to 8-5-1 for their worst record since 1963.

SHARE BLAME

Problems both on offense and defense shared the blame. Neither John Unitas nor Earl Morrall were as sharp in 1969 as they were in the past, and disappointments on defense required a few shakeups halfway through the season.

Unitas, trying to reclaim quarterback supremacy at age 37, will start tonight for Baltimore. Morrall and youngsters Jim Ward and Jeff Beaver aiso will see action.

Unitas threw eight more interceptions than touchdowns last year. Morrall did not complete even 50 per cent of his attempts. So McCafferty, naturally, is looking for improvement.

The Colts place some hope for the future on No. 1 draft choice Norm Bulaich, a running back from Texas Christian who will be counted on eventually to take over for aging Tom Matte and Jerry Hill.

On defense, cornerbacks Charlie Stukes and Tom Maxwell are going into only their second season as starters. They'll be tested by Oakland's outstanding receiving tandem of Warren Wells and Fred Biletnikoff who combined for 26 touchdowns last year.

TWINS PREVAIL

A's Come Up With An Artistic Loss

MINNEAPOLIS-ST. PAUL (UPI)—There must be an easier way to lose a baseball game.

The Oakland A's did it artistically Friday night while being edged by the Minnesota Twins 2-1 in 11 innings.

Outfielder Jim Holt won it with a homer leading off the 11th. His blast provided an almost comic effect, since the A's had gone to great and seemingly impossible lengths one inning earlier to prevent disaster.

With the bases loaded and none out in the 10th, retiever Marcel Lachemann came to the mound. In that situation, even a .180 hitter with a bat in his hand must be regarded as a slugger of enormous proportions.

MIGHTY HARMON

An extra layer of sweat undoubtedly crept through Lachemann's body as he watched Minnesota's pinchhitter stride from the dugout. It was Harmon Killebrew, benched for poor hitting of late, but still boasting 33 home runs and 89 runs driven in.

Most of the 20,000-plus Minnesota fans rose to their feet to savor the impending slaughter. Lachemann spoiled the script.

He got Killebrew, a tremendous clutch hitter, to ground into a doubleplay. Then he retired Gick Renick for the final out of the inning. What Marcel forgot the next inning was how to get a man out when the bases are empty.

SECOND STRAIGHT

The defeat, the A's second straight, plunged them nine games behind Minnesota in the American League West. With four games left in three days, Oakland needs a sweep to make any appreciable cut into the Twins' lead.

Catfish Hunter pitched admiragly for seven innings Friday night, only to go unrewarded by his teammates. The A's managed only five hits off winner Jim Perry after collecting just three basehits the night before.

Campy Campaneris slugged the first pitch off Perry into the seats for Oakland's only run. It was the little shortstop's 16th homer of the season. Rich Reese tied it up in the second inning with his eighth round-tripper of the year.

49er Hardy Hospitalized

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

SANTA BARBARA — Kevin Hardy, whose two previous years in pro ball have been marked by injuries, was shaken up Friday in a collision with Willie Peake during a San Francisco 49er contact drill.

Hardy was knocked unconscious by the collision and was taken to a hospital for overnight observation. Peake walked away from it all with a headache.

The Forty Niners will hold a workout Saturday morning and a game type scrimmage at night. Everyone will participate in the scrimmage except Hardy, linebacker Dave Wilcox and tight end Bob Windsor. The latter two have sore backs.

CANTON, Ohio — Hugh McElhenny (San Francisco 49ers), Jack Christiansen (Detroit Lions and later coach of the 49ers), Pete Phios (Philadelphia Eagles) and Tom Fears (Los Angeles Rams) were inducted into the National Football League Hall of Fame today, bringing to 63 the number inducted into the shrine.

Baseball

SAN FRANCISCO — The world champion New York Mets are providing the main impetus for an overall rise in National League attendance.

League president Chub Feeney said Friday that attendance through July 31 was up by 1,250,194 over a comparable period of last season.

The Mets have shown the most substantial gain, with an increase of 439,009. Cincinnati, running away with the National League West pennant, shows an improvement of nearly 400,000.

Horse Racing

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The holder of a $10 ticket on the daily double combination of 7-6 at Scioto Downs harness race track Friday collected $5,237 as the track recorded its highest daily double combination payoff this year and the third highest in the track's history.

Golf

NEWTON, Mass. — The United States, attempting to extend its 12-year domination of the bi-annual Curtis Cup competition, took a 5½-3½ lead over Great Britain. In the battle of top players, Jane Bastunchury of Whittier, Calif. beat British and English amateur champ Dinah Oxley, 5 and 3.

ATLANTA — Pam Barnett fired a three-under-par 70 to take the first round lead on the Lady Carling Open.

Today is Saturday, Aug 8, the 220th day of 1970 with 145 to follow.

The moon is between its new phase and first quarter. The morning stars are Mars and Saturn. The evening stars are Mercury, Venus and Jupiter.

On this date in history:

In 1940 the German Luftwaffe began s series of daylight raids on the British Isles that continued until Oct. 31.

In 1945 President Truman signed the ratification of the U.N. charter. Also in 1945 Russia declared war on Japan seven days before Japan surrendered.

In 1953 the United States signed a mutual pact with the Republic of Korea.

In 1968 Richard Nixon won the Republican nomination for president.

A thought for the day: German novelist Thomas Mann said, "Time cools, time clarifies. No mood can be maintained quite unaltered through the course of hours.

176 Charges Are Dropped

PALO ALTO (UPI)—The dismissal of 176 charges Thursday leaves just seven persons facing court action as the result of a melee following a rock music concert in Palo Alto July 11.

Charges against 80 juveniles had been dismissed previously.

Municipal Court Judge Sidney Feinberg took the latest action after District Attorney Louis B. Berna said he had insufficient evidence to prosecute.

HOW TO PLAY
WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Adventuresome Temperament Can Make Results Different

Some of the results you get at bridge depend on your temperament as much as on your skill. Some players like to take chances; others like to play close to the vest. The difference shows up in one of the hands played a few weeks ago at the world championship in Stockholm.

Opening lead — ♠ A

The bidding was substantially the same at both tables of the match. In the first room North responded two clubs to the opening bid of one no-trump. This was the normal Stayman Convention, asking South to show a major suit of four or more cards if he held such a suit.

In the first room South bid two hearts, and North promptly jumped to four hearts. It may have been North's assured manner or it may have been East's cautious temperament — but East did not double four hearts. South had to go down two, losing three trumps, one diamond and one club; and the penalty was 200 points.

MORE VENTURESOME

In the other room, American expert Billy Eisenberg was more adventurous with the East cards. He was willing to double four hearts for penalties even though the bidding sounded just as assured.

North's response of two diamonds was a variety of the Stayman Convention known as "Two-Way-Stayman." A response of two clubs looks for a part score in the major suits, but a response of two diamonds looks for game in a major suit. Having shown game ambitions by bidding two diamonds, North could later afford to bid only three hearts rather than jump to four hearts.

WILLING GAMBLE

Eisenberg was sure of three trump tricks with the East hand, and he might get four trumps if dummy unexpectedly turned up with the queen of hearts. The setting trick might come from as little as a queen or jack in the West hand. East was willing to gamble that his partner would turn up with something. West did, as it happened, and the penalty was 500 instead of only 200 points.

It helps to have a partner who turns up with a king or two when you make a slightly speculative double.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You hold:

♠ — 10 8 3 2
♥ — A K J 10
♦ — 10 2
♣ — 10 8 7.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two hearts. Despite your magnificent holding in trumps, the hand is not worth a stronger response.

Ferryboats Not The Final Answer; Bus Study Vital

"HOW ABOUT THE return of ferryboat service? Will it really solve Marin's commute problems?" asked the veteran newsman presently working in San Francisco.

His question hits the nail on the head. It is the q u e s t i o n which the Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District is committed to spend millions to a n s w e r. ((Millions of tollpayers' dollars, that is.)

The proof of the p u d d i n g is, of course, in the eating. We are about to begin that. The new ferry service may start operating as early as next week.

The eve of the pudding-eating is hardly the time for safe predictions, but we proceed to make them anyway.

The answer to the newsman's question is: "No, ferryboats will not provide the final solution. Some commuters will use them eagerly and will enjoy leaving their cars on this side of the bay. Unfortunately, these will be a monority. If their absence is felt at all on the highways during the commute hours, the relief will be only temporary. Traffic will increase. Within few m o n t h s at most the automobile commute situation will be as difficult as ever."

If and when newer, f a s t e r boats are put into service and new terminals are opened, such as that envisioned for the mouth of Corte Madera Creek, the same sequence of events will repeat itself. Each time relief, if any, will be but temporary.

WHY WILL THIS be so?

First, there will still be a traffic and parking problem getting to and from ferry terminals. If you have to take your car out on the highway and face these problems, you might as well make the effort worthwhile by driving all the way into San Francisco. After all, you will get there quicker driving than by ferry.

Second, if and when a good feeder bus system is established to carry commuters to and from Marin ferry terminals, let us consider what will happen. To make sure you do not miss your bus, you must get to the bus stop five to 10 minutes early. To make sure you don't miss your ferry, you must take a bus which will get you to the terminal five or 10 minutes before your boat leaves.

All this transferring will add 10 or 20 minutes to your commute time — twice a day, in the morning and again in the evening. Same thing happens when you get to San Francisco. And the ferry is s l o w e r. The trip takes longer.

Only a minority of commuters will c h o o s e to spend so much additional time commuting each day. A majority will prefer to sleep a bit later each morning and get home a bit earlier each evening, at the cost of bucking traffic and parking problems.

As with the present Tiburon ferry, however, there will be those who feel ferries are the only way to go. The additional time is small price to pay for the savoring of each moment of relaxation aboard the ferryboat coming and going from one's daily toil. Unfortunately, this view is held by only a minority of the total commuter population.

When fog, and storms and labor stoppages interfere with service, ferryboats become less attractive even for their strongest supporters.

No, Mr. Veteran Newsman, our prediction is t h a t feryboats will not provide the final solution for Marin's commute problems.

IF NOT FERRYBOATS, what?

Rapid transit trains, like BART?

Perhaps. But they, too, may turn out like ferryboats to appeal to fewer than ALL commuters. After all, you do have the p r o b l e m of getting to and from the terminals at both ends of the trip. While the train's speed may be great, the total e l a p s e d time from home to office may be just as great or greater because of the difficulties involved in getting to and from terminals.

B e c a u s e of their speed, rapid transit trains probably will none the less pull more cars from the road than will ferryboats, but the reduction in automobile traffic will not be so great as many expect.

W H E R E DOES THIS leave us, then?

Back to buses.

Fortunately, the G o l d e n Gate Bridge District is also preparing to experiment with improved bus commute service, too.

Improved service can be counted upon to increase bus useage. However, buses are s u b j e c t to involvement in the same traffic congestion problems as the private car. And this is their "achilles heel."

There is a way out.

Reserved lanes on freeways exclusively for buses (and emergency vehicles). Experiments in W a s h i n g t o n (D.C.) suburbs have been promising. Los Angeles is seriously considering a major expenditure for a major test of this approach.

Because a bus can circle the neighborhood picking up passengers, making it unnecessary to drive one's car to a t e r m i n a l, it has advantages over fixed-route systems l i k e ferries and trains.

The proposal for reserved l a n e s for buses deserves much more serious consideration than it has thus far received in c o n n e c t i o n with Marin's commute problems.

Bouquets And Brickbats

A BOUQUET to naval architect Philip F. Spaulding of Seattle for his bold, imaginative plan for ferry service to Marin. W h e t h e r it can prove p r a c t i c a l remains to be seen, but Spaulding's plan is commendable for its details and thoroughness.

A BOUQUET to Novato and Southern Marin Kiwanis Clubs for making possible the annual air fair today at Gnoss Field, N o v a t o. We hope it proves highly successful for all concerned.

BOUQUETS to Marin County supervisors for cancelling, at least temporarily, their proposed trip to Washington to appeal for more Point Reyes National Seashore acquisition f u n d s. The cost of transporting all five supervisors to and from the c a p i t o l, and their expenses while back there, is a drain on the county treasury which is better done w i t h o u t during these times when e c o n o m y should be the watchword.

A BOUQUET to Supervisor Louis H. Barr for putting into words what many of us have been thinking for a long time: "T h e r e 's been too much talk and not enough action in cleaning up the mess of houseboats and debris in Richardson Bay."

BOUQUETS (sad, farewell type) to San Francisco-Oakland Helicopter Airlines for good and faithful service rendered to Marin over the past years. We hope your departure is only temporary and that s e r v i c e will be restored soon.

BOUQUETS (glad, welcome type) to Golden Pacific Airlines which seeks to start "third level" passenger service to and from Marin.

A BRICKBAT (non-injurious, balsa wood imitation type) to President Nixon for his injudicious comments concerning the Manson murder trial in Los A n g e l e s. And A BOUQUET for the realistic action of Judge Charles H. Older in dealing with Manson's disruptive behavior which followed the president's blooper.

BOUQUETS (sympathy t y p e) to Robert F. K e n n e d y and R. Sargent Shriver f a m i l i e s on the occasion of their heirs facing drug abuse accusations.

BOUQUETS to the Sonoma County Board of Supervisors majority which put down efforts to have Sonoma withdrawn from ABAG, the Assn. of Bay Area Governments. The counties bordering the Bay must continue to work together to solve mutual problems.

The Nixon Faux Pas Surrounding Manson Trial Is A Real Puzzler

LOS ANGELES — Richard Nixon and Charles Manson are at opposite poles of the social spectrum. Yet together they managed to create havoc in a murder trial conducted, even before this intervention at long odds against objective justice, in an atmosphere of sensationalism and the pressures of mass prejudice.

When Manson defied the order of the court, rose in his seat and waved a newspaper with the headline "Manson Guilty, Nixon Declares" at the jury, he was entirely in character. He is a self-made outcast, beyond all the dictates of law, morality and reason, who has spent most of his wretched life in jails and detention homes.

THE MYSTERY IS the conduct of the President of the United States, a lawyer and a member of the California Bar. Supposedly his purpose at his Denver press conference was to rebuke the Los Angeles newspaper, which he had been reading at San Clemente, for their sensational reporting of the trial of Manson and the three young women members of his "family" in the Sharon Tate murder case. From this reporter's long memory, beginning with the thrill murder in the Loeb-Leopold trial in Chicago, the reports in this instance have been relatively restrained.

This is said against the background of crimes that for sheer cold-blooded, calculated h o r r o r have seldom been equalled. As widely reported when they were committed, they conveyed a sense of all that was vicious and sick at work in a disorganized and vulnerable social order.

To sit in the courtroom even for a few hours is to get this same sense of a sick sub-world quite outside the experience of the normal and rational. At times in the closely guarded room it seems like a bitter travesty of the processes of law and order so narrowly evolved across the years. The jury put together in five painstaking weeks faces an almost-impossible t a s k, now made doubly difficult by the President's intervention, i n sequestering themselves from all but what they hear in the courtroom.

Linda Kasabian, the state's principal witness, her hair p a r t e d in the middle and pulled back from both sides of her forehead, talks in her little girl's voice about her life in the jungle of drugs and sex.

She recalls lying in a field in New Mexico, just where she can't remember, on one particular trip. This was when she experienced w h a t she had been told was an "ego death."

The three women defendants, Leslie Van Houten, 19, Susan Atkins, 21, and Patricia Krenwinkle, 22, seem less concerned than anyone in the c o u r t r o o m. They whisper among each other and with t h e i r respective attorneys. They might be giggling schoolgirls a n y w h e r e instead of three young women charged with the murder of seven persons whom they had never seen before the slaughter.

AS FOR MANSON he defies description. So much has been written about him in his own terms — savior, messiah, the master of the lives of the young who fell under his spell.

He sits stroking his beard, smiling now and then, even occasionally laughing. With the young women who set perhaps 10 feet from him he obviously has complete rapport. They were long since irrevocably joined in the sub-world and now in this trial which has its dubious legal aspects they are as one.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Center Thanks Area Knights Of Columbus

The forest Meadows Development Center, an educational program for physically and mentally handicapped c h i l d r e n, is a publically supported school under the jurisdiction of the Marin County Board of Education. Located on the campus of Dominican College in San Rafael, the development c e n t e r currently serves 42 handicapped children and provides for them a noninstitutional natural academic envoronment designed to stimulate each child to achieve his utmost potential.

This spring, the Southern Marin Council of the Knights of Columbus staged a dinner at Our Lady of Mount Carmel Parish Hall in Mill Valley. The proceeds of the evening were donated to Forest Meadows. This gift has enabled us to purchase a new stove and refrigerator for the Development Center this enhancing a hot lunch program which was r e c e n t l y established for the youngsters.

We wish to express our appreciation to the Knights of Columbus and commend the members of the Southern Marin Council for their generosity and support.

LINES ON LIVING

We Must Accept Changes In Life Like The Seasons

By Rabbi HAIM KEMELMAN

In the change of seasons, we see our own human situation, with spring, summer, autumn and winter rolling in a flowing and steady stream of time.

And the wisdom of life is to accept change and to find whatever beauty and grace it possesses. The all-wise tells us: "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the sun."

Certainly it's easy to rejoice in spring, to be exuberant in summer. When all is promising and bright, warm and life-laden, smiles come lightly, l a u g h t e r is abundant. But when a u t u m n comes and moods are drooping, to sustain the joy and laughter of brighter days requires wisdom.

AUTUMN IS usually associated with a melancholy spirit, with a sort of baleful resignation. We have enjoyed the summer in all its fullness of life. Yet it seemed so fleetingly short, so regrettably speeding for the accommodation of all our dreams. We hardly had time to savor the season, and behold it's rolling out of sight. And here we stand half fulfilled, h a l f - d a z e d, to find change coming upon us, compelling us to accept the new and alternating realities of life and of nature.

We are more than a little saddened to see flowers fade, leaves fall, light diminishing and s h a d o w s lengthening. Do we see in the life of nature, the nature of our own life?

It seems that only a short time ago, the day dawned in a longer m o r n i n g, the sun glowed in fuller warmth and the night surrendered to a longer evening. Now we are compelled by seasonal change, to accept the shortcuts in daytime, sunshine and leisure. And slowly and steadily frost is felt; its first traces of white are visible.

YET, THERE is a glory and splendor in autumn. If it is the end to that beginning which marked our spring, it is also the beginning to another natural pause and lapse that will eventually usher in another beginning, a new spring.

Growth and decay are interchangeable. We can see a new beginning at each end. Falling leaves and decay make way for a new vitality to germinate, for a new birth of spring to come after next winter's desolation.

But, meanwhile, autumn is here and there is so much beauty and truth in it to cheer the heart. If it has no heat, it has a restful serenity; if it has waning light, it has solemn depth; if it is followed by a long winter, it is surely readying for another spring and another ripening.

And if autumn could speak to us, it would tell us to surrender gracefully to change. For in surrender there is glory and strength. There is surrender in love; there is surrender in charity; there is surrender in joy and there is surrender in harmony and peace.

THE LESSON of autumn is clear; after a summer of floral and green offering to the universe, it fears not the temporary retreat of sun, warmth and growth. The downward movement is a necessary decline in the constant lurchings of the eternal see-saw of nature and life. And with every downward motion, there is sure to come an u p w a r d swing.

It is futile to resist change. It is self-defeating to refuse to turn a new page on the calendar. Like in the nature of seasons, there is beauty and truth in every age of human life, in every season of living. By moving with the seasons and by seeing a purpose in time, we can derive the f u l l e s t meaning of the moment. And if we "take care of the moments, the hours will take care of themselves," adding new and revitalized life to our years.

ART BUCHWALD

These Days It's Hard To Keep Track Of Your Kids

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Art Buchwald took off for Tahiti before anyone could catch him. He left behind what he claims are some of his more memorable columns.)

WASHINGTON — Nobody likes to talk about it, but there is a lot of kid-swapping going on in the United States. It isn't going on just in the suburbs or the small towns, but in the larger cities as well.

I hadn't realized how prevalent kid-swapping was until I moved to Washington. One night I came home from the office and instead of finding my dark-haired little beauties I d i s c o v e r e d a 7-year-old blonde s t r a n g e r doing the twist.

"Who's she?" I asked my wife.

"That's Ann Lindsay. She's staying here for the night with Connie."

"Where's J e n n i f e r?" I asked.

"SHE'S SLEEPING at Priscilla's house b e c a u s e Ann Lindsay's sleeping here."

"Who's Priscilla?"

"Jennifer didn't know her last name, but she says she's her best friend."

"T h a t 's nice. Where is Joel?"

"He's s l e e p i n g at his friend's, B.J. He said if Jennifer can sleep somewhere else so can he."

"Where does that leave us?" I asked my wife.

"Well, we had three to start with, we got rid of two for the night, and we gained one, so we're only short one."

"It saves on food," I agreed.

"NOT REALLY," my wife said. "We had fish tonight, but Ann Lindsay doesn't like fish, so I had to go out and get her a steak. Then when Connie saw Ann was getting a steak she wanted one, too."

"I wouldn't mind having a steak myself," I said.

"You can't. Somebody's got to eat the fish."

The next weekend when I came home Connie was missing, but Jennifer had two friends and Joel had B.J.

At 8 o'clock I ordered them all to bed.

"B.J.'s f a t h e r lets him watch television until midnight every night," Joel, who is 9 years old, said.

"Is t h a t true, B.J.?" I asked.

"Sometimes l a t e r," B.J. said without batting an eye.

"WHEN I STAYED at B.J.'s last week," Joel said, "we didn't go to bed until two in the morning.

"My parents don't like me to go to bed early," B.J. said, "because then I wake up early."

"Well, why don't we just call up your parents and ask them what time you go to bed?"

"Oh, you don't have to do t h a t," B.J. said hurriedly. "They've probably gone out to a movie."

Just then the phone rang. It was Mrs. Lindsay, who said, "What time do you usually put Connie to bed?"

"Eight o'clock," I said.

"SHE SAID YOU let her stay up till midnight to watch television. I was a little worried." Mrs. Lindsay seemed relieved.

Later that evening I said to my wife, "We've got to put a h a l t to this kid-swapping. Everyone on Cleveland Avenue is starting to talk."

"Oh, it's harmless," my wife said, "and they get so much fun out of it."

But I knew what I was talking about. A few weeks later I came home and found three kids at the dinner table. None of them mine.

"What happened?" I asked.

My wife was rather embarrassed. "There's been a dreadful mix-up. Joel invited Francis over to sleep with him, but he forgot he'd accepted an invitation to sleep at Butch's. Jennifer and Connie were invited over to Karen's, but after they left, Veronica and Mary Elisabeth showed up and said they had been invited over here. I didn't have the heart to send them home."

"So now we've got three kids that don't even belong to us," I said.

"Yes," my wife said, "and guess what? They said their mothers let them stay up until midnight to watch television."

FROM V-J DAY TO VIETNAM

A Generation Of Asian Entanglement For U.S.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Twenty-five years ago this week President Truman announced the unconditional surrender of Japan and the end of World War II. Now, a generation later, Japan and the United States are firm friends but elsewhere in the Orient U.S. forces are still engaged in battle. The following article, by a UPI correspondent who recently spent several years in Asia, traces the course of events in this turbulent area during the past 25 years.

By JOHN F. BARTON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — "I have just received this afternoon a message from the Japanese government in reply to the message forwarded to that government by the Secretary of State on Aug. 11. I deem this reply a full acceptance of the Potsdam Declaration, which specifies the unconditional surrender of Japan."

Thus did President Harry S Truman, in a tense voice reflecting the high drama of the moment, inform the world on a hot and humid night 25 years ago that the Second World War was over. The time was 7:00 p.m., Washington Time, Aug. 14, 1945.

It was three years, eight months and five days after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor shattered the U.S. Pacific fleet and plunged the United States into war in Asia as well as Europe.

The victory which Truman announced was to prove as traumatic for the United States as defeat was for Japan. The super bomb which brought Japan's surrender also launched the atomic age. Neither the world nor Asia would ever be the same.

Hopes for world peace quickly froze in the stark reality of the cold war between the western allies and the Communist world. The political vacuum caused by the collapse of the Japanese empire sparked a power struggle in Asia that eventually polarized the Communist world between Moscow and Peking and engulfed the United States into two land wars —Korea and Vietnam.

If Iwo Jima and Guadalcanal were far away places with strange sounding names in wartime America, Seoul and Saigon, Da Nang and My Lai were to become household words to a later generation.

Japan's defeat also signalled the end of colonialism and the rise of nationalism in Asia. As a result, the United States finds itself more involved in Asia in 1970 than anyone imagined on that hot August evening in 1945.

With the collapse of the French empire, the defeat of Chiang Kai-shek by the Communists and the planned withdrawal of Britain by mid-1971, the United States is the only major World War II ally to maintain a dominant role in Asia.

Spurred by domestic unrest and growing public dissatisfaction with the Vietnam War, President Nixon appears determined to honor America's military commitments in Asia but to adopt a lower profile based on more economic and less military aid to the area.

But even as Nixon proceeds with a measured reduction of the U.S. military presence in Vietnam, Korea, the Philippines and Japan, there is public apprehension that somehow the United States will be drawn depper into war in Laos and Cambodia.

The President sees Japan playing a major role in his effort to help Asian nations help themselves. In his State of the Union message this year, Nixon described Japan as the "linchpin" of American foreign policy in Asia.

He has encouraged Japan to combine its own economic might with that of the United States to help develop underdeveloped nations, especially in Southeast Asia. In a brief quarter century, Japan and the United States have gone full circle from wartime enemies to peacetime allies.

Truman's announcement of the Japanese surrender was a dramatic climax, but hardly unexpected. Peace rumors had been circulating for weeks, particularly after the Aug. 6 A-bombing of Hiroshima.

In fact, a war weary world started celebrating Japan's defeat at 2 a.m. (Washington time) that Aug. 14.

But 13 long hours passed before Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, nervously pacing up and down his office, received at 3 p.m. the first official information that a Japanese surrender note was, in fact, enroute.

At 6:10 p.m. the Swiss charge d'affaires rushed the Japanese note to Byrnes. The secretary sped to the White House, where 50 minutes later a jubilant Truman announced the war's end, setting off public celebrations that lasted several days even though V-J Day was not proclaimed until formal surrender ceremonies were held aboard the USS Missouri in Tokyo Bay on Sept. 2 (Sept. 1 Washington time).

Like Germany a few short months before, the Japanese empire lay in ashes.

The toll for both victor and vanquished was staggering. American casualties, in both European and Pacific theatres, were 1,078,162 —three times those of the First World War. Official figures listed 292,131 Americans killed in battle, another 115,185 dead from other causes and 670,846 wounded.

Japan was devastated, its teeming population starving. In a Tokyo radio broadcast on Aug. 23, 1945, Japanese officials claimed that nearly 10 million persons had been killed, wounded or left homeless during the war. They said 44 cities had been almost completely wiped out and another 37 cities had at least one-third of their industrialized areas completely gutted by allied bombing raids.

The death toll from the first atomic bomb ever used in war, dropped by a U.S. plane on Hiroshima in the early morning hours of Aug. 6, 1945, was still estimates of the immediate estimates of the immidiate dead from the blast and radiation exposure varied from 80,000 to 200,000. Everthing in the four central square miles of the city was pulverized.

U.S. military officials said later the Hiroshima bomb was made obsolete by the atom bomb dropped only three days later on Nagasaki, where the immediate death toll estimated ranged from 39,000 to 74,000.

It was only after the war that American military authorities discovered Japan had been closer to defeat than U.S. officials realized. On March 18 all Japanese schools except first grade classes were closed for a year and students mobilized for food and munitions production and air raid defense. Emperor Hirohito declared in a public message June 23 that "the present crisis is unprecedented in scope in our national history." Rice ration cuts followed.

Byrnes also revealed that Japanese officials in late June asked the Soviet Union, then not at war with Japan, to use its good offices to sue for peace. Instead, Soviet Premier Josef Stalin, apparently believing the Russians would have a strong voice in the Japanese occupation, declared war on Japan Aug. 8, two days after the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and only six days before Japan actually surrendered.

The occupation, which was to last nearly seven years, began when Col. John Lackey, of Norfolk, Va., landed the first group of technicians of the U.S. Fifth Air Force at Atsugi Air base near Tokyo about 9 a.m. on Aug. 28, 1945. They prepared Atsugi for the main landing of airborne troops scheduled for Aug. 30 .

Under the leadership of Gen. Douglas MacArthur as Supreme Allied Commander, the United States encouraged social and political reforms which broke the hold of the old industrial-military complex over the country, laid the foundation for a miraculous economic recovery, and provided a constitution which renounced war, prohibited nuclear weapons, and declared the emperor was not divine, but merely "the symbol of the state and of the unity of the people."

The occupation also laid the foundation for a strong friendship between Washington and Tokyo which persists today despite increasing disagreements on trade matters.

But if all went remarkably smoothly in Japan, it did almost nowhere else in Asia. The brilliant foresight with which the U.S. government was able, even during wartime, to plan an enlightened occupation of Japan did not carry over into foreign policy decisions concerning other Asian nations.

Even as the Japanese surrender was being announced, colonialist powers were returning to Asia to resume their rule, short though it would prove to be in most cases. Britain quickly reasserted its authority in Hong Kong, Singapore, Burma and other colonial possessions lost to Japan.

Truman abandoned the apparent intention of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt to prevent France from regaining Indochina. While there is no indication that Roosevelt, had he lived, would have had any more success with France than he had in arguing with Britain for Indian independence, there are indications that Ho Chi Minh, who had collaborated with the allies against Japan, had hoped he would. That might have prevented the future Vietnam War which so far has cost 43,000 American lives.

Instead, Truman agreed to let the British occupy the southern part of Vietnam and the Nationalist Chinese occupy the northern part until French colonial officials could resume their rule there.

In Korea, the United States agreed to let the Soviets liberate that part of the nation north of the 38th parallel, with the result that Stalin installed the Communist regime of Premier Kim Il Sung there. The seeds of the Korean War were sown, a war in which 33,629 Americans died in battle, 20,617 from other causes and 103,284 were wounded before the armistice became effective in July, 1953.

Postwar colonialism was to prove shortlived, however. The United States willingly set an example by granting independence to the Philippines on July 4, 1946, in accordance with an act passed by the U.S. Congress in 1934.

Other colonial powers followed suit, more by necessity than desire. Mainly because of staggering war-caused economic problems at home, Britain granted independence to India and Pakistan in 1947, to Burma and Ceylon in 1948. On Sept. 16, 1963, London recognized Malaysia, the coalition of her former colonies, from which Singapore broke off on Aug. 9, 1965.

Happiness, Humiliation Marked Signing Of Japanese Surrender

EDITOR'S NOTE: Frank Tremaine, now UPI Vice President and General Manager for North America, covered World War II in the Pacific for United Press from the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor to the surrender ceremonies aboard the USS Missouri in Tokyo Bay nearly four years later. In the following personal report he recalls the day the Japanese signed away their sovereignty.

By FRANK TREMAINE
U.P. International

Vice Admiral Jock McCain broke into a little dance step, then grabbed Fleet Admiral Bill Halsey by the arm. They grinned at each other like a couple of kids just out of school.

Milling around them on the small gallery deck of the USS Missouri were some 50 Allied generals and admirals. The 45,000-ton battleship, her guns pointed skyward and the flags of the Alied powers fluttering in a light breeze, was anchored at last in Tokyo Bay.

It was shortly before 9 a.m. Sept. 2, 1945. Clouds hid the sun and Mt. Fujiyama which should have loomed to the west. The generals and admirals on the gallery deck and thousands of other officers and men hanging from the superstructure of the Missouri and aboard dozens of other warships anchored nearby awaited the Japanese surrender delegation for the final act of the war which had begn 3,900 miles to the east with the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941.

Then a small American boat was sighted moving through the armada toward the Missouri. She pulled up to the starboard side while the generals and admirals assembled in ranks along the inboard side and the rear of the small deck.

Up the steep stairs from the small boat came the Japanese delegation.

There were 11 of them—seven generals and admirals in uniform, three men formally attired in top hats and morning coats and one man in a rumpled white suit. They looked uncomfortable and unhappy as they assembled before the waiting Allied party on the deck of one of the world's most powerful warships, built since their bombs dropped at Pearl Harbor.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who had been designated Supreme Allied Commander in Japan, stepped forward. His face was grim and one wondered about his thoughts at this moment.

He told the Japanese it was his intention to discharge his responsibilities with "justice and tolerance" but "to ensure that the terms of the surrender are fully, promptly and faithfully complied with."

Then he said, "It is my earnest hope and, indeed, the hope of all mankind that from this solemn occasion a better world shall emerge out of the blood and carnage of the past, a world dedicated to the dignity of man and the fulfilment of his most cherished wish—for freedom, tolerance and justice."

First to sign for the Japanese was newly-designated Foreign Minister Mamoru Shigemitsu.

He doffed his top hat as he seated himself with some difficulty at the table and began the distasteful job of signing away his country's sovereignty. One could not know then that soon Shigemitsu would be convicted as a war criminal, would serve five years in prison, then rise again to post of foreign minister in less than another five years, a symbol of the firm but constructive occupation administered by MacArthur.

Shigemitsu signed where MacArthur told him to, once in a black-bound copy for the Japanese in their language and once in a gold-bound copy in English for the Allies. He was followed by Gen. Yoshijiro Umetsu, chief of the Imperial General Staff, who signed for the Japanese armed forces.

When Umetsu stepped back, MacArthur said, "Will Gen. Wainwright and Gen. Percival step forward while I sign?" Lt. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright, who surrendered at Corregidor, and British Gen. Ernest Percival, who surrendered at Singapore, came to attention behind the chair in which MacArthur seated himself to sign as Supreme Commander in Japan.

MacArthur appeared to be under considerable emotional stress. His hand shook slightly as he took up the first of five pens with which he signed the documents. When he had completed the signing, he rose and handed one pen to Wainwright, another to Percival. They saluted smartly.

Then Fleet Admiral Chester Nimitz, Supreme Allied Commander, Pacific Ocean Areas, stepped forward to sign for the United States.

Then followed admirals and generals representing Great Britain, China, the Soviet Union, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, France and the Neterlands.

It was approximately 9:30 a.m when the signing was completed and the Japanese withdrew. The sun was breaking through the clouds as MacArthur spoke again, warning that "a way must now be found to preserve the peace because science has given us war of utter destructiveness. We have had our last chance. If we do not devise some greater and more equitable system, Armegeddon will be at our door."

This Week In The World

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Another spotlight was focused on the "Manson Family" murder trial, one of the nation's most sensational cases in years, when President Nixon stepped in and asserted the hippie cultist patriarch was guilty of the Tate-LaBianca killings.

Presumably a slip of the tongue as Nixon met with newsmen in Denver, the remark that Charles Manson "was guilty, directly or indirectly, of eight murders without reason" nevertheless reverberated to the Los Angeles courtroom where defense lawyers immediately petitioned for a mistrial.

Ironically, the President made the comment prior to joining a series of private meetings with more than 100 federal and state officials gathered for a conference on crime control.

Nixon, a lawyer, apparently was unaware of his remark or its gravity and, despite an attempt by White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler to correct the statement shortly afterwards, no clarification was issued until the President landed at Andrews Air Force Base on his return to Washington.

In his clarifying statement, Nixon said he was "misunderstood" and added, "the last thing I would do is prejudice the legal rights of any person in any circumstances.

"I do not know and did not intend to speculate as to whether the Tate defendants are guilty, in fact, or not," he said.

Manson and three of his female followers are accused of slaying actress Sharon Tate, grocer Leo LaBianca and six others during two nights of violence last August.

Much of the recent proceedings in the courtroom centered on defense demands for a mistrial on grounds Nixon prejudiced the verdict, but the motions were denied by Judge Charles H. Older.

Manson flashed a newspaper headline of the Nixon incident at the jury, which has been sequestered throughout the trial, but the gambit staged in efforts to get a mistrial failed.

Around The World, Around The Clock

MOSCOW — Soviet and West German officials agreed to the text of a treaty opening the way to improved relations between Bonn and Eastern Europe.

WASHINGTON — The United States and Spain signed an executive agreement promising the equivalent of $300 million to Spain in exchange for American rights for bases. The agreement was contracted without congressional consent, which was not required.

PARIS — The new chief U.S. negotiator at the peace talks, David K.E. Bruce, proposed a renewed effort to settle the Vietnam War in his first day on the job, but the Communists replied Bruce added nothing new to the bargaining.

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird announced a draft call of 39,500 for the remainder of the year, making the 1970 total of 163,500 the lowest since 1964.

JERUSALEM — Israel formally accepted the U.S. Mideast peace plan amidst a walkout from the coalition government of the minority, hawkish Gahal party. Egypt shot down an Israeli Phantom fighter bomber over the Suez Canal.

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex. — Hurricane Celia, packing winds up to 145 miles an hour, slammed into the Texas Gulf Coast and caused extensive damage. President Nixon declared the region a disaster area.

OAKLAND, Calif. — Black Panther leader Huey P. Newton was released from prison after a bail hearing. He had been sentenced to two to 15 years in the death of an Oakland policeman.

WASHINGTON — The House passed and sent to President Nixon legislation creating within a year an independent government agency to run the post office and granting postal workers a pay hike.

Monterey Policemen End One-Day Strike

MONTEREY (UPI) —Monterey's 60-man police force ended a one-day strike today after accepting a new pay offer from the City Council.

No major crimes were reported in this coastal resort city while day-long negotiations between police representatives and the council took place Friday.

The two sides compromised on a salary hike of 8 1-2 per cent across the board plus educational incentive pay. The police had been demanding a 15 per cent pay boost, while the council offered six per cent.

The new pay scales will raise policemen's wages from the current range of $646 to $785 a month to a range of $702 to $853 plus the incentive pay.

Only three policemen were on duty during the brief strike — the chief, deputy chief and a captain. Monterey County Sheriff's deputies were available had they been needed.

Before the strike, during negotiations that started in May, policemen shaved off beards they had grown for Monterey's bicentennial celebration and wore their blue uniforms instead of special brown ones.

A week later they returned to the brown uniforms and tried to fake the beards. None of this helped in the negotiations and the strike followed.

Meanwhile, police in San Jose voted to authorize "steps necessary" to get higher pay — including a strike —and a police walkout in Petaluma was delayed at least temporarily by a court injunction.

The San Jose policemen voted to authorize a walkout but told their representatives to continue bargaining "as long as the city is willing to negotiate in good faith."

FRANKFURT, Germany (UPI) — Astronaut Neil Armstrong, the first man to set foot on the moon, arrived in West Germany today to take part in ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of competitive glider flying.

San Francisco School Board To Await Integration Order

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) —A federal judge will have to issue a court order if he wants San Francisco's schools completely integrated by September of 1971, the school board decided Friday.

The board refused to go along with U.S. Dist. Judge Stanley A. Weigel's suggestion that it agree to draw up an integration plan by next January and implement it by the following September.

President Alan Nichols said after an emergency, closed-door meeting that the board wanted more time in order to involve the community in any changes.

A federal suit demanding immediate integration of the city's schools was filed by the NAACP.

"The NAACP represents only one group," Nichols said. "We want the entire community involved in whatever plan is developed."

But he said the board would obey if the judge ordered it to prepare the plan and implement next year.

Sept. 10 Is Last Day To Register For Nov. 3 Vote

Sept. 10 is the last day to register to vote in the Nov. 3 Sonoma County General election, according to Eugene D. Williams, county clerk.

New residents must have been a citizen of California for at least one year and a county resident for three months by the election date to be eligible.

Persons who failed to vote in the 1968 general election or have changed addresses should also register.

Williams said persons may register at 34 locations in southern Sonoma. Registration locations may be located by calling the registrar of voters office in Santa Rosa.

Bilingual registrars are available at several locations for Spanish-speaking residents. Incapacitated persons may request a registrar to make a house call.

Design Honor To Library At Mill Valley

Trustees of the Mill Valley Public Library have accepted a large bronze plaque awarded by the American Institute of Architects for the library's design and are looking for a place to install it.

Librarian Alberta L. Hankenson said trustees conferred Thursday night with Robert N. Huston of the San Francisco architectural firm of Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons on the placement of the plaque.

A dedication ceremony will be held when the honor award is mounted, Miss Hankenson said. The award was the only one given to a California building in 1969.

Board members also discussed the library's continuing problem of theft of letters from the sign in front of the building. They decided to mount the letters flush with the wall instead of on risers, thus making them more difficult to steal.

Trustees also decided that books for which there is a heavy demand will be available for seven days only and may not be renewed. Miss Hankenson said it had been the library's policy to buy duplicate copies of popular books, but the cost proved too great.

AN ORIGINAL PAINTING by Henri Chevalier showed Marin County's historic Ross Landing, as developed by Ross Valley pioneer James Ross, as it appeared in 1883, looking southwest. It is now the site of the College of Marin in Kentfield with the old waterfront from which were once shipped tons of timber and produce now filled in. The original painting belonged to San Francisco bookstore owner Warren Howell when the Independent-Journal first reproduced this picture in 1962.

The Valley They Named For James Ross

(Editor's Note: This is another of the manuscripts on early-day Marin County events, places and people completed by the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian, for the Marin Magazine prior to her death.)

By FLORENCE DONNELLY

The name Ross heard today in Marin County immediately brings to mind tree-lined streets and beautiful homes set in landscaped gardens.

But it was not like that when James Ross and his wife came to Marin in 1852.

The Indians had had their rancherias on the land. And after the coming of the white man, it became part of a vast land grant, awarded first to Juan B.R. Cooper, brother-in-law of famed Gen. Mariano G. Vallejo.

In the grant to Cooper, made by Gov. Juan B. Alvarado in 1840, the land was given the lengthy name Punta de Quintin Corte del Madera La Laguna y Canada de San Anselmo, and it stretched from San Quentin across the San Rafael hills, skirting the land grant to Domingo Sais, through what became Ross Valley and on beyond.

COOPER SOLD his land to Benjamin Rush Buckelew who sold large parcels of the property before he died, still a young man, in November of 1859. His widow, Martha, made still more sales.

One of the largest of these parcels was bought by James Ross who was to give his name to the area he acquired.

Ross was born in Petty, Invernesshire, Scotland, in 1839. He and Annie Sophia Greyling of Deal, Kent, England, were married in Australia.

THEY HAD three children. They were Annie Sophia Esther, James Jr. and Rebecca.

The Ross holdings in Marin were bounded on the San Rafael side by land owned by J.O.B Short and his brother, Jacob, and went to the summit of Bald Hill and extended through the Ross Valley.

The pioneer Mr. and Mrs. Ross led a busy life. He built a sawmill where logs were cut for the construction of houses and other buildings plus shipping docks on his property and proceeded rapidly with its development, while his wife reared her family and with the help of her servants provided meals for her husband's many workers. Ross envisioned, not a ranch, but a town and busy shipping center.

BY MARCH 26, 1865, the Marin County Journal reported:

"Ross Landing — This place is evidently looming up, bound to be a place of importance some day. It is the point from which is shipped the greater portion of cord wood in this vicinity. During the busy season from 10 to 12 vessels, ranging from 10 to 50 tons capacity, may be seen lying at the embarcadero taking on freight for San Francisco.

"From this point is also shipped the lumber manufactured at the Lagunitas sawmill owned by Shaver and Co. We understand that the mill soon will commence running and a great quantity of lumber turned out in the coming season.

"A PACKET schooner plies tri-weekly to San Francisco and is represented as doing a fair business.

"The town contains 15 or 20 houses, two stores, a butcher shop and a shoemaker's shop, while a blacksmith's shop is in the course of erection. We are informed that brickmaking will be carried on extensively the present summer."

Donald Perry Sr., who married Annie Worn, a Ross descendent, wrote many articles on Marin County history and in telling of its early transportation system said that prior to 1884 "all shipping was done through the Ross Landing wharf."

AND THE LATE Howard Watson Bray, in a talk before the Marin County Historical Society, recalled a visit he made to Ross Landing in 1881 with the captain of his father's steamer, the Tulare. The Tulare, he said, visited the wharf regularly to pick up hay, grain, potatoes and other produce hauled there by farmers of Marin and Sonoma counties.

In the same talk I can remember Bray telling how, when he was young, he took a job with a large steel and metal wholesale company in San Francisco and was assigned a sales territory that included all of Marin.

He said: "In its early days Marin County had a large dairy production and there was always a great demand for tin milk pans, which were manufactured by hand in different tin shops in San Francisco, and all seamed. I sold gross after gross of these in Marin.

"THEN ABOUT this time there was developed in the East a special milk pan that was stamped 'seamless.' I sold many of these, too, in Marin.

"I made my trip through this section once a month in a one-horse sulky, as there was no stage or other land transportation at the time." And Ross Landing, he added, was a regular stopping point.

But it was Donald Perry Sr. who wrote: "The Ross family lived in a log house situated where the old Bosqui house was built later." (Editor's Note: Florence Donnelly related the history of this property in the Independen-Journal of Sept. 25, 1965.)

PERRY ADDED that the log house was destroyed by fire, and that Mrs. Ross, who survived her husband by many years, then resided in a house that is now in the central part of Ross.

Donald Perry Jr., his son, remembers visiting Mrs. Ross at her home where the Ross School playground is now located. After her death a part of the property was sold to the town of Ross for park purposes.

An article printed in the Marin County Journal of Aug. 6, 1870, reported:

"THE DIAMOND drill: George Worn is now boring for an artesian well at his residence with this invention. He has gone down a depth of some 130 feet in solid rock within a short space of time and hopes, when through the rock, to obtain the necessary supply of water."

Worn, who was born in Dublin Ireland, and came to California in 1849, and his wife, the former Annie Sophia Esther Ross, had shared in the division of the Ross property with the passing of her father.

To the widow of the senior Ross had gone all of what is now the town of Ross, Kentfield, Larkspur "and below there."

TO THE WORNS went the San Anselmo area that lay within the ranch grant boundaries.

To the widow of the Ross son, James Ross Jr,. the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Miller who later remarried to James Tunstead, went the Linda Vista tract, some San Anselmo property outside the ranch, and 20 acres in the Greenbrae vicinity.

The second Ross daughter, Rebecca, who had married Ross Makin, received the Laurel Grove territory.

DONALD PERRY Sr. wrote: "Where the Catholic Church (St. Anselm's) is now located was the dividing line between the holdings. Mrs. Worn also had 23 acres where the Kittle home was built."

The Worns sold that parcel to the Jonathan Kittles — and it was later to become the Marin Art and Garden Center — , and they concentrated upon farming their holdings in the general area of what later became the seminary athletic field.

Their water supply came from a large spring far up the slopes to the south of Bald Hill. Iron piping was not then in use, so a small lead pipe was laid for the more than a mile from the spring. It was laid quite shallow so that frequently when a cow chanced to step upon it in wet weather, the pipe would collapse.

THEN THE children would be sent out with hammer and a brick to find the bottleneck and beat the pipe back into its proper shape so that water would flow again.

Donald Perry Sr. told, too, of listening to stories by George Worn Jr. of how he frequently had to swim his mules when he went ploughing across a formidable creek that ran between the barn and the house of the Misses Daniels at Ross Avenue and Jones Street.

Perry was a source for interesting stories about other prominent Ross Valley residents as well, including the noted lawyer Hall McAllister of Kentfield, covered recently in another of our Marin Magazine articles, and yet another prominent lawyer, William Barber, who was a cousin of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

THE JOURNAL on June 12, 1969, reported: "Work on the road from San Rafael to Ross Landing, over the hill and through Short's Addition, was commenced on Tuesday last."

But it was the building of the railroad through the Ross Valley that really opened up the area to land travel and brought an influx of new residents such as the McAllisters and Barbers. Wealthy men with offices in San Francisco could now buy huge estates in Marin, live there in comfort with large staffs of gardeners to beautify and maintain their grounds and servants to attend to their mansions, while commuting to and from their work.

The Marin County map of 1873 shows Ross Landing, the Ross Homestead, the 79 acres of land of Albert Dibblee, and various unnamed tracts of land.

THESE WERE the beginnings of a trend that were to see more and more homesites in the Ross Valley as it became quite the thing to have a "country house" in Ross. Indeed, a good many, charmed by the beauty and the climate, of the countryside decided to live there full-time.

Trees were planted along the roadsides to provide shade for these people when they rode in their carriages to the train station to commute to work or on to San Rafael to shop. This marked the origins of many of the large and handsome trees that are so distinctive of Ross today.

The society Blue Book of 1896-97 season listed a number of Ross residents, among them Mr. and Mrs. William Barber and the Misses Alice and Mary, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bosqui and the Misses Laura and Helen, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bothin, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Butler, Mr. and Mrs. James Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dibblee, A. J., Harrison, Benjamin R. and Anita, Mrs. Jonathan G. Kittle, Mrs. Anna Ross and Miss Annie S. Worn.

THE ARGONAUT on June 12, 1905, reported:

"The wedding of Miss Louise Worn, daughter of Mrs. George A. Worn Jr., to Mr. John T. Beales took place at San Anselmo Chapel, Ross Valley, Tuesday at 3 o'clock."

As occurred elsewhere in Marin, the Ross Valley experienced another influx in population in the refugees who came from San Francisco after the 1906 earthquake and fire. Many who had previously lived in Ross only during the summers now

THIS OLD MAP, from the Dr. W. Scott Polland Collection, shows the location of Ross Landing, founded by James Ross, in relationship to other landmarks of the Ross Valley, including the Murray house, still standing in Kentfield, and the brickyard where Jean Escalle later ran his inn and winery. Also shown is the two-story adobe Bickerstaff house on what later became the George Niven property in Larkspur. White denotes water, the lighter shading mudflats and the darker shading land.

SOME ROSS VALLEY neighbors and friends had gathered on the porch of the mansion of William Barber, prominent attorney, for some socializing. Among the guests were the Worn sisters.

chose to reside there permanently. Other newcomers bought land and built homes.

OLD NEWSPAPER files make frequent mention of Makin Grade.

Donald Perry Sr. explained that it was Ross Makin, husband of Rebecca Ross, and the inheritors of the Laurel Grove area, who developed the grade.

The Makin Grade was the road that ran from Laurel Grove over the hill to San Rafael, coming down into the county seat's south side. It was a favored route for horseback riders. The road no longer exists, as well surfaced streets give easy access to motorists traveling between Marin communities.

WHILE GEORGE Worn was a gifted horticulturist, there was an artistic strain in the women of his family. Daughters Isabella and Grace, who never married, and Annie, who, as noted earlier, became Mrs. Donald Perry, delighted in decorating the chapel in Ross with the flowers they had grown in their garden. They took a special interest in the chapel, for their grandmother, Mrs. James Ross Sr., had donated the land upon which the first chapel was built. The site was at the southwest corner of the county highway where it was intersected by Lagunitas Road.

The chapel was incorporated under the name San Anselm Chapel. The articles of incorporation, dated Jan. 31, 1881, names as directors William Barber, M. M. Tompkins, C. Temple Emmett and Alfred Todhunter. The last was its first clergyman.

COMPLIMENTED so much for their artistic decoration of the chapel, the three Worn sisters were encouraged to open a floral shop in San Francisco in the middle 1890s. The business was located on Sutter Street.

It was an era when miles of smilax and stiff, formal arrangements were considered creative. But the trio of sisters, shy and retiring as they were, had their own definite ideas on decoration. They insisted that their clients intrust to them the responsibility for selecting and arranging flowers. And they succeeded in bringing to the San Francisco area an entirely new concept, much freer, of flower arrangements.

SOON IT became a "must" during the years of Ned Greenway that the decorations for the San Francisco Cotillions be done by the Worn sisters. They did the arrangements, too, for the many balls honoring debutantes, and for receptions for visiting U.S. Presidents, foreign royalty and other dignitaries.

Long after the passing of the Worn sisters, many long-time Bay Area residents still remembered and spoke of the beauty of the floral decorations done by the creative women from Ross.

Donald Perry Jr., at his Sunnyside Nursery in San Anselmo, maintains a family tradition by providing plant beauty for Marin gardens and homes.

THE SMALL chapel in Ross was the setting in the spring of 1899 for the wedding of his parents, Donald Perry Sr. and Annie Worn. And no doubt the place was made splendid by floral decorations — done by the bride's talented sisters.

Residents of Ross were greatly perturbed in the early 1900s by what they regarded as an overly-aggressive Greater San Rafael movement. They viewed with alarm attempts to incorporate the area from the Corte Madera tunnel and White's Hill to Lucas Valley all into one metropolis under the San Rafael banner.

It was largely to prevent its inclusion in the envisioned Greater San Rafael that the city of San Anselmo was incorporated in 1907.

ROSS RESIDENTS moved, too. They petitioned the Marin County Board of Suprvisors: "It is the desire of the people to have a town of their own so that they can construct their own roads and make them the best in the land."

The Journal commented: "There has been some talk to the effect that the Kentfield territory should be included, but it was stated that Kentfield does not wish to join."

The supervisors held two days of hearings.

THE JOURNAL reported: "The discussion was held in front of a large delegation of prominent residents of Ross and Kentfield. The Kentfield people objected, arguing that the entire valley should be incorporated in one city. But the Ross Valley people countered that they were unanimous, and that outsiders should not have the right to interfere."

An election was set by the supervisors, and Ross residents voted to incorporate as a town in August of 1908.

The first trustees were E.G. Schmiedell, W. M. Brown, C. A. Meusdorffer (an architect) and A.J. Kittle. John Clute was town clerk, J. Witt (appropriately listed in the 1910 register of voters as a "capitalist") the treasurer and H.C. Rogers the marshal.

FEW OF THE pioneer men who came to Ross Valley outlived their wives, the senior Perry noted, so that the widows owned more than three-quarters of the land in the Ross Valley.

"Yet, because suffrage had not yet been granted, they had no say on the issue of incorporation," he pointed out. "As a matter of fact they were all bitterly opposed to the idea of incorporation. But while their employees — gardeners, stable men, butlers and others, had voting rights, these wealthy women had no voice in the matter."

Among the widows who were to become major Ross landholders were those bearing the names Barber, Kittle, Coffin, Moore, Dibblee, Latham, Martin, and, of course, Ross and Worn.

WHEN EVENTUALLY the original little chapel in Ross became too small for a growing congregation, it was one of these women, Mrs. James Coffin, who donated the land where St. John's Church was built and still stands.

That church and the rectory were completed in late 1911. The little chapel then became a Guild Hall and Sunday School until the construction of the Community House.

Many residents of Marin County did not welcome the era of the automobile, showing considerable foresight as to the changes it would make in their peaceful way of life.

DONALD PERRY Sr. told of the experiences of Thomas Berry of Ross who bought one of the first automobiles. "He drove it around the roads in his vicinity and it frightened the horses to such an extent that an ordinance was passed in San Rafael prohibiting the driving of such vehicles upon San Rafael streets after nightfall.

"Berry defied the ordinance and was duly arrested and convicted. He appealed to the Superior Court, but the judgment of the lower court was sustained.

"The case was brought before the State Supreme Court on a habeas corpus proceeding. Judge Angelloti wrote the opinion for the court which appears in the California Reports of 1915. That opinion stated that city authorities had acted within their rights . . . that it was, indeed, a well-known fact these vehicles frightened horses and endangered the lives of citizens.

"BERRY, EVENTUALLY, had to pay the fine."

The Worns had a close friendship with many of the old families of the area including the Moores, Winships and the Barbers.

The William Barbers had two daughters, Grace and Mary. One of the girls became the wife of Floyd Jones. She owned a goblet from which the famous Marquis de Layfayette had drunk a toast that was the family's pride.

DONALD PERRY Sr. told how the Barbers sold their sizable holdings to the Winships, and that section eventually came to be known as Winship Park.

Ross General Hospital, the valley's major institution, is the outgrowth of a sanitarium founded by Dr. Author J. Ritter, a native of Zurich, Switzerland. Dr. Ritter had done research in anthropology and allied sciences in Africa, had studied medicine in Paris, and had come to California in 1910.

He studied medicine at Stanford University, then in 1918 founded the sanitarium in Ross with 18 beds. Dr. Mary W. Harris, who became a staff member in the 1920s, said there were still but 25 beds "and only a couple of tuberculosis patients" at the time she joined.

DIRECTORS OF the sanitarium included George Rodden, Frank Foran, Dr. Fred Lowen (the president) and Dr. Rafael G. Dufficy (vice president). Miss Ena Hunt was secretary and treasurer.

In 1922 another institution, the Katharine Branson School, moved to Ross Valley, locating on 16 acres at the foot of Bald Hill in Ross on property that had originally been part of the Dibblee Estate and more recently had been owned by the John Martins whose name appears on the Town of Ross official map for 1909 as drawn by George L. Richardson, Marin County surveyor.

The school had been started in an old mansion on Fifth Avenue in San Rafael.

THE MARIN Journal in an issue in September of 1920 told of a housewarming that the Misses Katharine and Laura Branson had given for their new Branson School. Listed among the guests were the Arthur W. Fosters, the Kenneth Kingsburys, the Benjamin Dibblees, the Harrison Dibblees, the Alexander Lilleys, Mrs. Thomas Scott Brooks, Mrs. Shepard Eells, Mrs. Henry Kuechler, Mrs. Albert Dibblee, Mrs. Jonathan Kittle, Mrs. Crawford Greene, Mrs. Paul Foster, Mrs. Henry Batkin, Mrs. James K. Armsby and Mrs. James Coffin.

Many of those guests were members of Ross families.

It sometimes amuses Marinites to hear middle-aged or older men say they went to the Branson School. But in its early years, it accepted boys as pupils. And it did not, until later, become the Branson School for Girls. It was, also, after the move to Ross that the name became the Katharine Branson School honoring the co-founder who served for many years as headmistress.

THE ENROLLMENT today includes both resident and day students, and the girls come from not only throughout the Bay Area, but from across the country and from foreign lands to take advantage of a first-rate curriculum and such facilities as a large heated pool and special instruction such as western horseback riding.

Nearly 100 per cent of the Branson girls go on to four-year colleges, including Smith, Vassar, Wellesley, Radcliffe and Mount Holyoke, as well as Stanford and the University of California.

Bordering what is now called the Sir Francis Drake Boulevard, but designated on the map as the Red Hill and Ross Landing Road, is the Marin Art and Garden Center. It is property that was once the James Ross Estate, then the George Worns home, and finally the Jonathan Kittle property.

THE KITTLES remodeled the Ross home extensively in the late 1800s, but the mansion was ravaged by fire in 1931 and had to be razed.

The large barn and the Octogon House, a smaller outbuilding, escaped the flames. For a time, the barn was taken over by a private school. Today, the Ross Valley Players present their plays there, it having been their home since the 1930s.

When the Kittle heirs decided to sell the choice parcel of land, Mrs. Norman B. (Caroline) Livermore, a prime mover in the Marin Conservation League, went into action. She feared a subdivision of the property that would destroy its natural beauty. She mobilized the conservation league, nature and garden societies and cultural groups in a public subscription drive to raise the funds to buy the Kittle estate and preserve it for posterity.

IN 1945 THE Marin Art and Garden Center became an actuality, and in September a fiesta celebrated the realization of the cultural center.

The grounds are carefully attended, and buildings house art, antiques, decorations and other exhibits. A modern kitchen provides food for events such as luncheons and parties.

The annual Marin Art and Garden Fair has been held each year on the grounds under the trees and among the flowers. However, the 1970 fair, held over the Fourth of July weekend, was scheduled as the last to be conducted there. New fairgrounds are to be built at the Civic Center in the Santa Venetia area of San Rafael.

AS A MEMORIAL to Natalie Coffin Greene, daughter of the James Coffins, her husband A. Crawford Greene, bequeathed the Phoenix Lake property to the Town of Ross.

The Greene Estate had bought the lake property from the Marin Municipal Water District.

In 1967, Isabel Kittle Dibblee of Ross gave the town 2.6 acres along Ross Creek to provide an access to the 25-acre Greene Park. Mrs. Dibblee's gift, part of her 50-acre estate, was in the memory of her late husband, Benjamin H. Dibblee.

THE LAGUNITAS Country Club of Ross is an exclusive organization with its memberships much coveted. The older families in the valley have been represented in the club for several generations.

Dances are held in the clubhouse, a rustic structure, and youngsters and parents alike enjoy the outdoor recreation the club provides.

With all its attractions, Ross has continued in the role of a quiet country town that it prefers. Industry is not invited. There is no mail delivery in the village, as many older residents still refer to it. The residents prefer to go to the postoffice to get their mail where they meet old friends and catch up on the latest news.

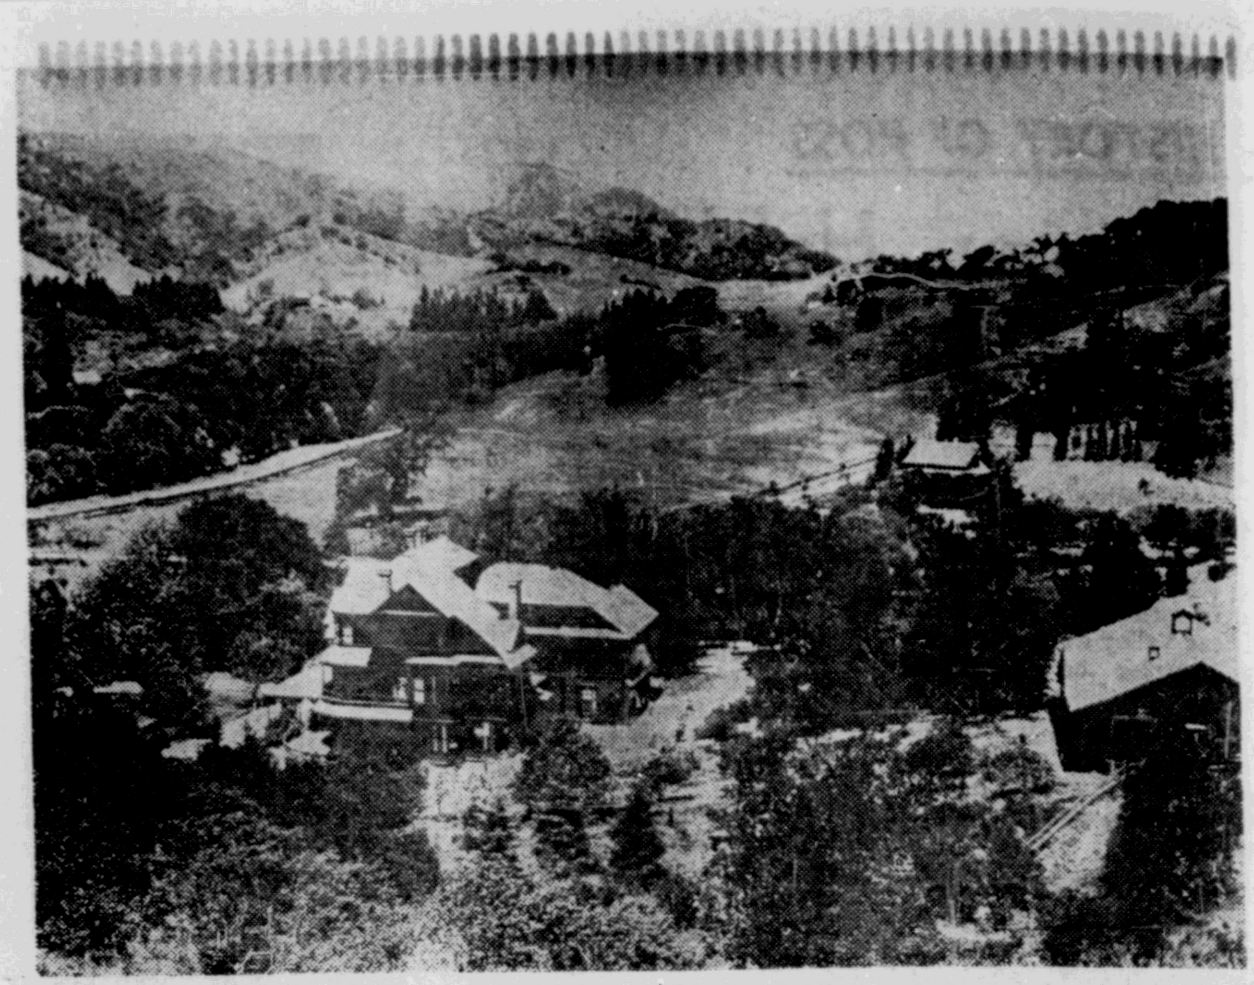
TYPICAL OF Ross' commitment to the preservation of its natural beauty is its strict enforcement of the ordinance against signs.

The tree-lined thoroughfares are called lanes and roads — not streets. Every effort is made to maintain the quiet. The town government operates out of a small but modern town hall.

The 1969 population figures set the number of Ross town residents at 2,768. They are served by fire, police and street departments, a building inspector, a tax office, trustees and a town clerk.

SO ROSS residents have largely succeeded where many others have failed — in retaining the refinements of yesteryear while gaining most of the benefits of contemporary progress.

As San Franciscans say "don't call it Frisco," so Ross residents, particularly the older ones, are likely to say: "Don't call it a city. It's a town. Or the village."



THIS PHOTOGRAPH taken in about 1880 from the approximate point where the Marin Art and Garden Center amphitheater now stands shows the Jonathan Kittle Estate and the Ross Valley with Sir Francis Drake Boulevard and the Kittle barn, now used by the performing Ross Valley Players, also showing.

THE SEAT OF Ross' town government today and the meeting place of its town council is this small but attractive Town Hall in the heart of the quiet, wooded community. Ross became incorporated in August of 1908 after a vote of the male residents. Town services include fire and police departments, a town clerk, a building inspector, a street department and a tax office. (Independent-Journal photo)

CO-AUTHORS OF the newly-published book, "Worlds in the Making," are Maryjane Dunstan, left, and Patricia W. Garlan, above. Miss Dunstan is an instructor in communications at the College of Marin where two years ago she initiated a course called "Inventing the Future" that looks into some of the same problems explored by the book. A Fulbright lecturer in English in Burma from 1958 to 1962, she is the newly-appointed adviser to foreign students at the college in Kentfield. Miss Garlan is a research editor in non-verbal behavior at the Langley Porter Neuropsychiatric Institute in San Francisco and says: "I am uncontrollable with a pencil in my hand." The two women have collaborated previously upon books for children.

A Hopeful Overview Of Mankind's Future

Marin Teacher's Book Explores Some Imaginative Alternatives

Those of us who feel uneasy about what the world will be like 20 years from now may find ideas, insights, challenges and new approaches to the problem of man being "phased-out" of future worlds in a new book, "Worlds in the Making," just published by Prentice-Hall, Inc.

The co-authors, Maryjane Dunstan, chairman of the communications department at College of Marin, and Patricia W. Garlan, a research editor for the Studies in Non-Verbal Behavior at Langley-Porter Neuropsychiatric Institute, call their book "Probes for Students of the Future," And, although prepared for use as a text, it provides provocative reading for all, with pertinent quotes from scores of popular works, and containing everything from Peanuts cartoons to illustrations from Space Odyssey wherever needed to help make a point.

"THIS LOOK AT alternative futures is not the study of utopias or of science fiction. Rather, it is an exploration of the new capabilities and problems spawned by present day science and technology," say the authors.

They believe that unless the disillusionment of today's students can be turned to vision for tomorrow, their pessimism turned to commitment, the future will be bleak, indeed. "The future is," they say, "after all, in their hands."

"It has been suggested that this is a 'bookzine,' more like a magazine than a book, and we encourage people to treat it like a sandwich, biting through its layers," says Miss Dunstan. "We're not interested in continuity and logical thinking, but in cutting across perspectives and getting the imagination to work."

TWENTY STUDIES have been grouped into seven general parts.

Part 1, "Grokking the Problem," emphasizes the point that the rate of change is accelerating rapidly and that the need to cope with change is critical.

Part 2, "Coping with Change," meets the problems and finds ways we can cope with them. The reader is encouraged to try alternative personalities and settings, "trying on a different self—what it is like to be black, for example, or white, if you are black." The aim is to help him to become a more open, adaptable person.

Part 3, "Exploring Spaceship Earth," examines the physical environment and offers some radical approaches for changing it.

PART 4, "THE Machine-Enemy or Ally?," investigates the threat and promise of technology. The reader learns to accept the fears as real, the dangers as controllable and technology as inevitably a factor in the future.

Part 5, "Evolution or Revolution," explores six aspects of the cultural environment which are grouped into three classifications: work-play, communication-transportation, education-evolution. The authors believe that technology must be used to conserve our scarcest resources — the individual's time, energy and living space.

Part 6, "Discovering Human Nature," helps the reader explore what it means to be human; first, by seeing what some people have to say about it and attempting to develop his personal creed; second, by playing with his own constructions, his own experiences of being human.

Part 7, "Inventing the Future," offers a poetic and hopeful overview.

MISS DUNSTAN spent several years researching the book, and signed a contract with the publisher more than two years ago. While researching and gathering data, she initiated a new course at College of Marin, "Inventing the Future," in which students would have an opportunity to study future and alternate worlds via interdisciplinary studies of psychology, anthropology, data processing, communications, science and other fields.

The course has been a tremendous success in terms of interest aroused and in activating the student's concern for the human being in a rapidly changing natural, technological and cultural environment, according to college officials.

English and communications departments in colleges and universities across the country have expressed an interest in the book, and it is expected to become a standard text for courses in these departments. It is available in hardcover, and in paperback at the College of Marin bookstore, and at several Marin retail locations.

Miss Dunstan and Miss Garlan previously have co-authored children's books for Viking Press. "Worlds in the Making" is their first textbook.

Nancy Blunk, Free Spirit

Inve ness Woman Tries To Live The Life Of The 'Complete Artist'

By DON KEOWN

As a school girl living on Guam with her parents Nancy White Blunk experienced a passion to become an architect.

Her inspiration came from the great Richard Joseph Neutra who was a houseguest in her home, who encouraged her ambition and who urged her to attend the University of Hong Kong to study architecture.

But the enthusiasm was a brief and passing one.

"I found out that architecture was not all creative," she recalls. "When I discovered just how much mathematics and engineering were involved, I changed my plans."

Yet Nancy Blunk, Marinite and free spirit, can honestly claim today that in a two year period she has "designed" two complete villages, one Bohemian, the other Italian. And without the math or engineering.

THE VILLAGES were created as backdrops for Inverness Music Festival performances, the Italian setting for last year's "Cavalleria Rusticana" by Mascagni, the just being completed Bohemian hamlet for Smetana's "Bartered Bride" that will be one of the highlights of the 1970 festival opening next Friday night in Inverness.

"The Bartered Bride" will be performed in the outdoor amphitheater of St. Columba's Church on Sunday, Aug. 16, and again on Aug. 23 before the imaginative Czech stage set designed by Mrs. Blunk.

The designing of sets for the festival has become an annual labor of love for Mrs. Blunk.

AND, SHE SAYS, her old dislike for things mathematical is still reflected in her work upon the sets.

"I know I drive the set-builders to distraction," she says, "but I never work through blueprints. Just sketches, and then a model.

"I'm the same way with the costumes and props. I never use a pattern."

Costumes as well as sets? Indeed, for Mrs. Blunk is deeply involved in virtually all aspects of the Inverness Music Festival that, in its sixth year, has become an established Marin institution and tradition, drawing music-lovers from a wide area to the tranquility and beauty of West Marin.

A BOARD MEMBER since the Inverness Music Festival was formally organized and currently its secretary, Mrs. Blunk functions as organizer and director Fae McNally's good right hand.

She first met McNally in 1965 shortly after his first festival. The meeting took place on the Inverness Firehouse lawn where McNally and some musician friends performed informal concerts of Bach and Schumann music.

One result of that meeting was a resumption by Mrs. Blunk of piano lessons she had abandoned years before.

ANOTHER WAS her involvement with a chorus that presented three performances of Handel's "Messiah" that Christmas, at St. Columba's, at Synanon and at the San Geronimo Presbyterian Church.

Her work with the festival followed, and that became a major interest in 1967 when Jack Mason of Inverness built an amphitheater on the grounds of St. Columba's Church and offered it to McNally and his group for their use.

"The first year," recalls Mrs. Blunk, "we sang the Haydn oratorio 'Creation' using the basic backdrop of redwood shakes that Jack Mason had built. The

IN HER ONE-ROOM home set amidst the hills and trees of Inverness, Nancy White Blunk works in quiet upon some designs for costumes for the upcoming music festival. Now festival secretary as well as a board member, Mrs. Blunk is more than ever involved in the event that has become a tradition with Marin music-lovers.

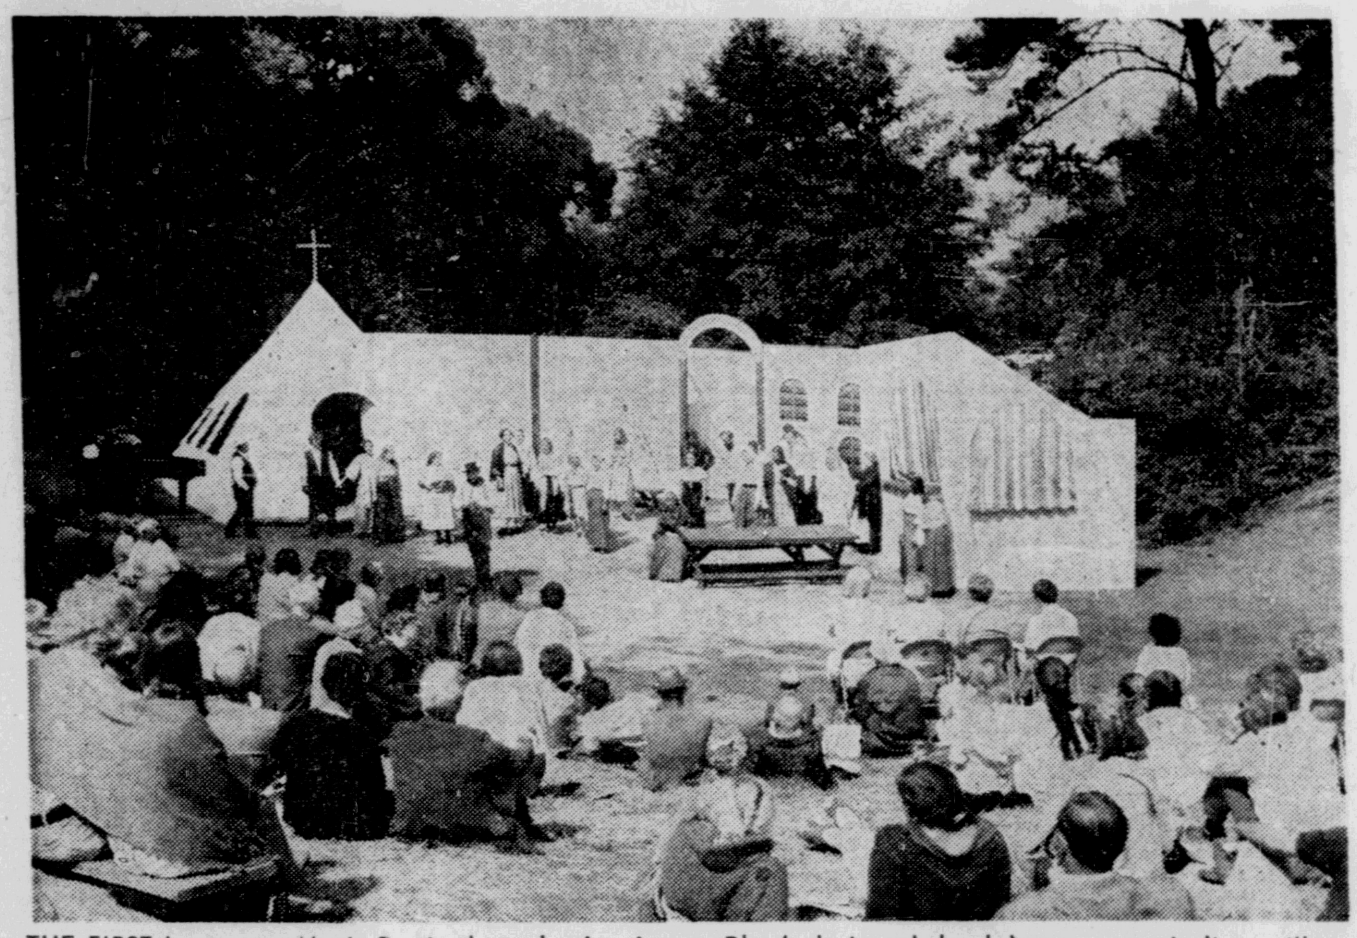
THE EARLIEST Inverness Musical Festival performances outdoors in the St. Columba's Church amphitheater took place in front of the basic redwood shake backdrop provided by Jack Mason who built the outdoor stage.



THE FIRST Inverness Music Festival production in the amphitheater to utilize a Nancy White Blunk-designed backdrop — an Italian village setting — was Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana."

NOT ALL Inverness Music Festival programs take place outdoors. Some are held inside St. Columba's Church, as was this performanec of J. S. Bach's "Musical Offering" in 1966.

acoustics were fantastic — astonishing!"

THE FOLLOWING year Mrs. Blunk designed a set and built a model for a scheduled performance of Handl's "Samson."

"I still think it is the best that I have done," she says.

But an estimate from a lumber company of the cost of the materials put an end to that project. Instead, "Samson" was presented within the church as a chamber opera without a set — "very beautifully and successfully."

Last year Nancy Blunk got her first real opportunity to see one of her designs in use.

THE EFFORT SHE put into designing and the supervising of the construction by volunteers of the village scene for "Cavalleria Rusticana" was well rewarded by the appreciative reception given it by audience and performers, she says.

This year's Bohemian town of the 1850s where the "Bartered Bride" takes place is a holiday scene that permits Mrs. Blunk to deal generously with color — ribbons, flowers, etc.

"I have even 'planted' a tree at the center of the stage," she says. "Actually, it's a dead tree trunk. But live branches will be attached just before each performance."

HER SET DESIGNS begin, she says, with research for authenticity, the amount required depending upon her prior knowledge of the subject.

And sometimes she runs into a technical problem, such as the thatching of roofs. "After some involved study of how professional thatchers perform their work, I happened to be on the grounds one day when the gardener was weeding. There was a big pile of weeds and grass. And so the idea came: Why not just put down some chicken wire and stuff it with grass and weeds. And you would have a thatched roof.

"And you know, it works quite well!"

MRS. BLUNK laughs: "How organic can you get?"

Nancy Blunk's interest in and appreciation of organic living is a long-held and deeply-felt one.

"I live in the woods, quite removed from town and neighbors," she says.

Nancy White was born 37 years ago in Los Angeles, a second generation Angeleno, both her parents having been born there as well. Her mother was a registered nurse, but practiced very little after the birth of Nancy and younger sisters.

The father was a civil engineer who worked for the city's water and power department, until 1948 when he moved his family to Guam to begin a 15-year career as a civil service engineer, first with the Navy, and then, on Saipan, with the Department of Interior.

AT INTERVALS HE was also associated with the Agency for International Development in American Samoa and in East Africa.

Young Nancy displayed an early talent for music and art, and began studying ballet and piano at 6.

Her progress on the piano was considerable, so that, in her early teens, she was preparing a concerto to audition for a young artists' series with the NBC Orchestra "when I rebelled."

"I didn't realize it, but my confusion and dissatisfaction with the piano stemmed from my total inability to read music," she says.

SOME 20 YEARS later when she became a piano student of Fae McNally, it was "as an absolute beginner as far as reading music was concerned."

Now she teaches a few beginning piano students "and learn more from teaching than they learn from me."

After joining her family on Guam for her high school years, Nancy returned to the mainland to enroll at Palo Verdes College in the Los Angeles area. It was a small, experimental liberal arts school stressing fine arts, psychology and philosophy, with 100 students and 35 instructors.

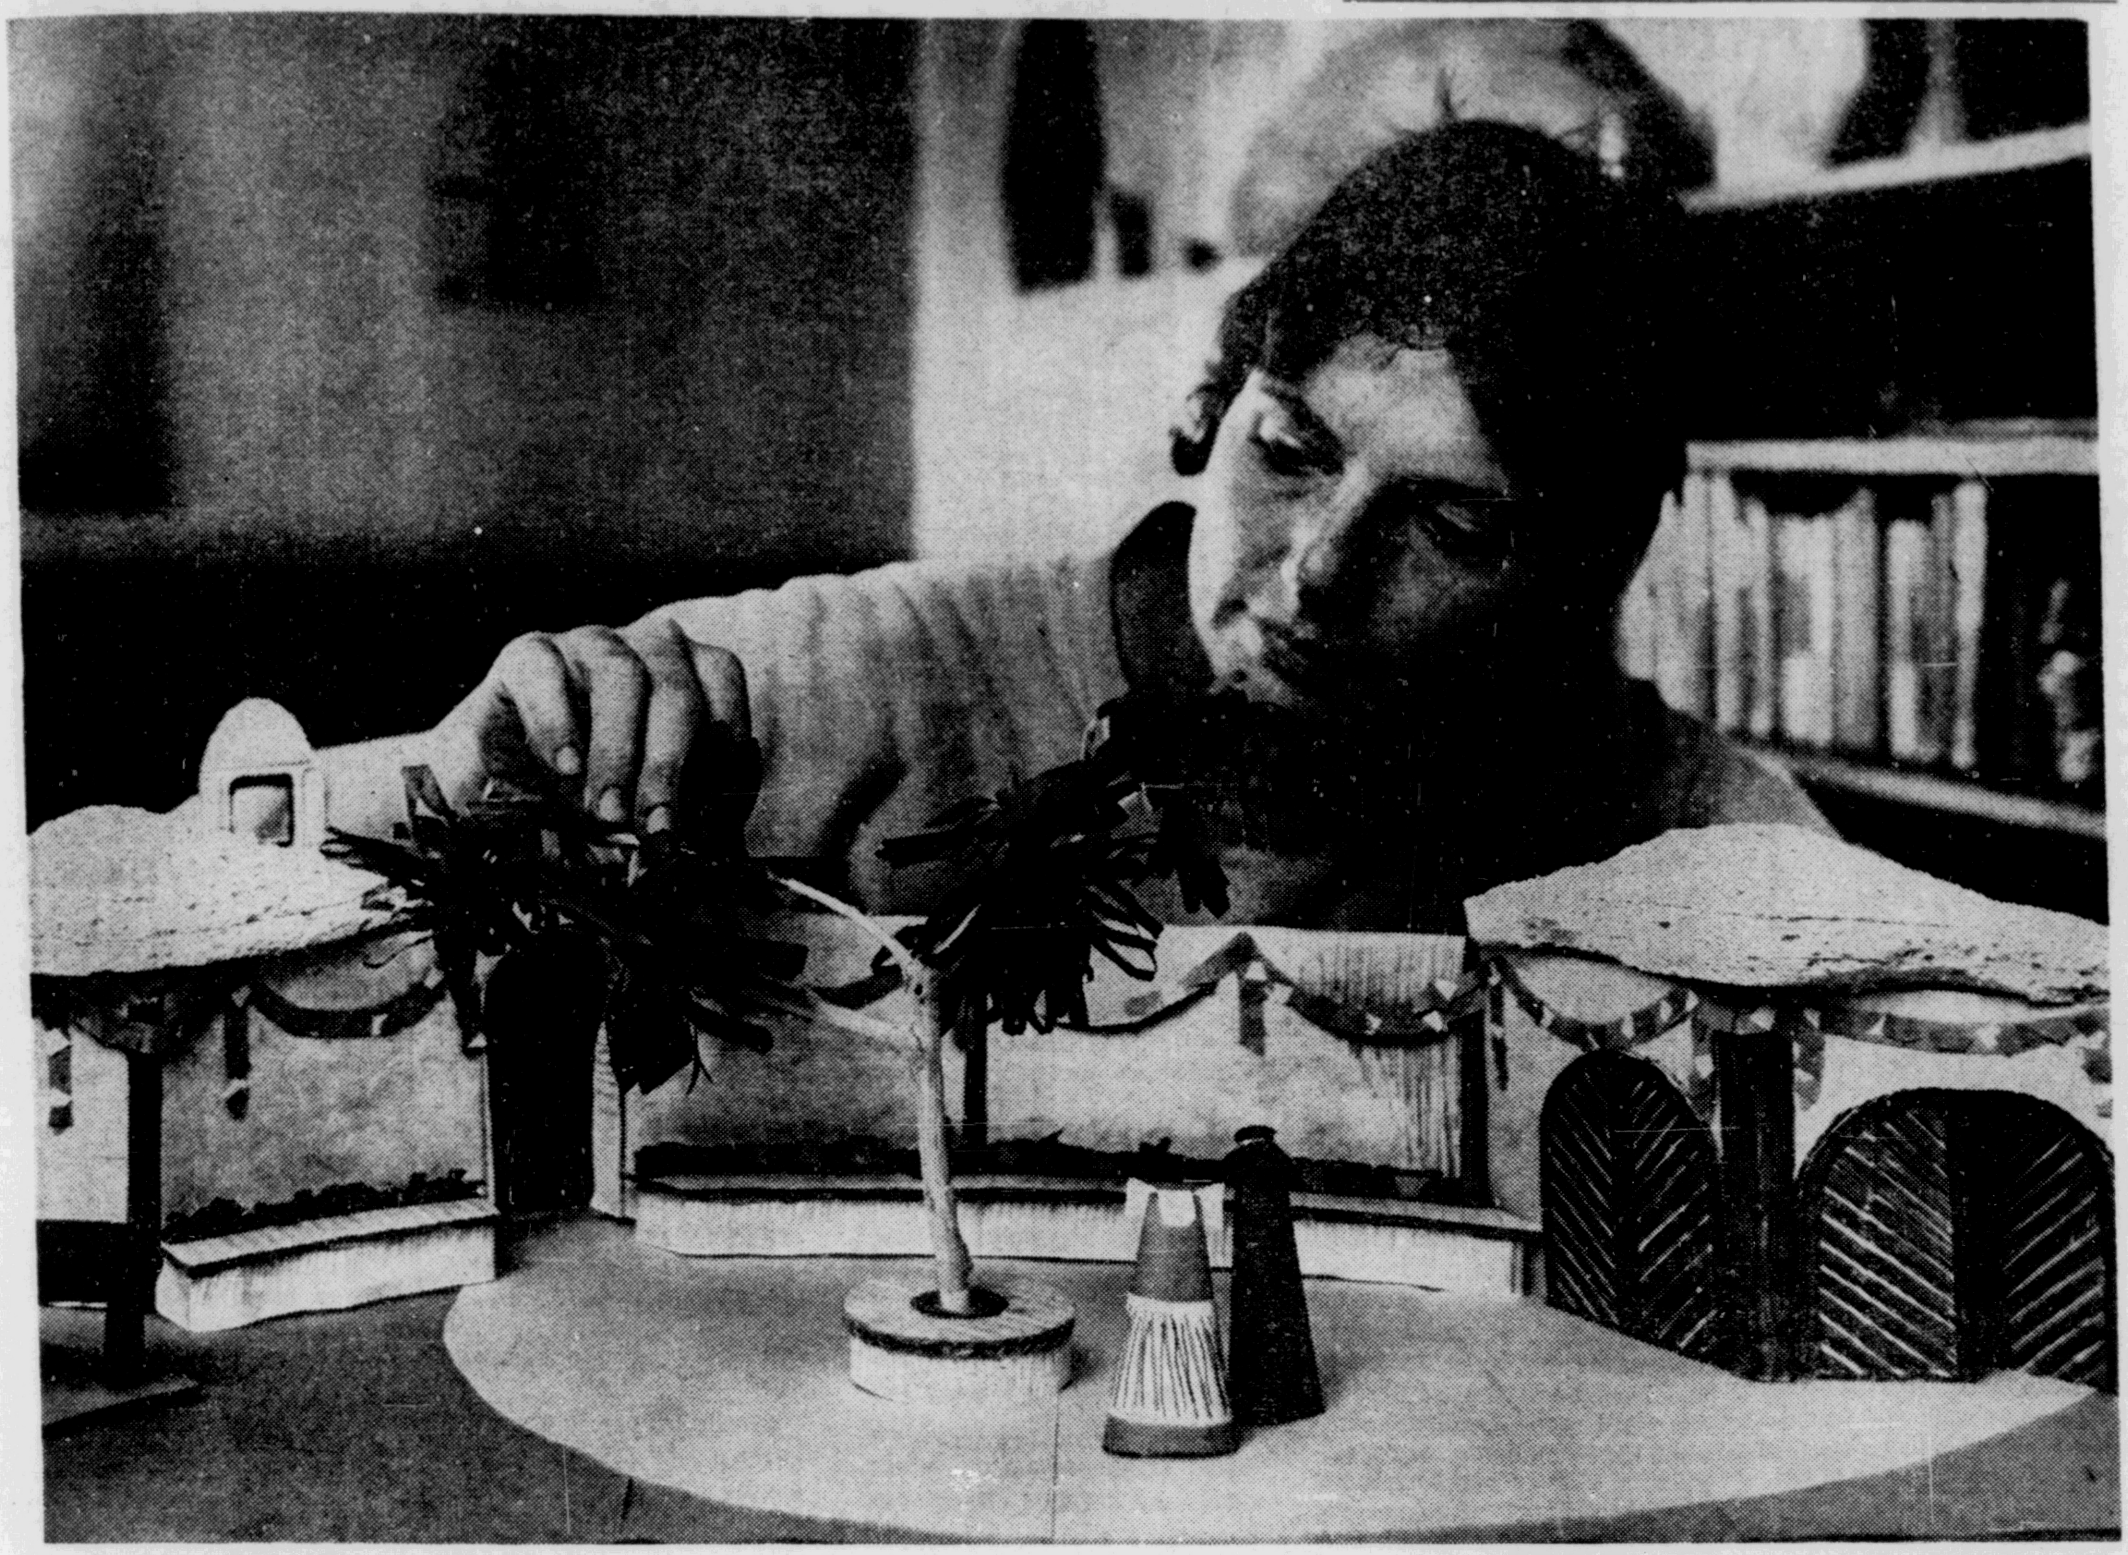
"ONE COURSE called Laboratory in Art Theory had five students and seven instructors!" she recalls.

There were six graduates when she received her Bachelor of Arts Degree in Human Relations — "mostly taught by a Jungian psychoanlyst" — in 1955. Her studies had also included Comparative Religion — "which began to change my life by interesting me in Oriental culture and philosophy" — plus painting and the dance.

"For a time I had the idea I would join the Martha Graham Studio after graduation, but gradually this hope dimmed."

PART OF THIS period, too, were summer evenings spent watching ballet and listening to concerts in the Hollywood Bowl which, she mentions offhandedly, "was founded by my grandfather."

Following graduation she moved to San Francisco and worked for a year in that city's Japan Town for the Takahashi Trading Co. while her interest and appreciation of things Japanese, including the language, grew. She studied calligraphy, sumic (ink drawing) and the tea ceremony at the Academy of Asian Studies, then directed by Alan Watts.



WHEN CARPENTERS construct a stage set designed by Nancy White Blunk, they have no blueprints from which to work. But they do have sketches, and a model. Here she is shown with her scale model of her set for the 1970 Inverness Music Festival performances of "The Bartered Bride" in the amphitheater on the St. Columba's Church grounds, Inverness.

She met and fell in love with a young potter, John Blunk. They married and moved to Inverness in 1956. The marriage lasted 10 years and produced two sons, Bruno and Rufus, now ages 13 and 11.

BLUNK STILL resides at inverness and has earned international acclaim as a sculptor. "He has a marvelous talent," says his ex-wife.

During the marriage Nancy helped her husband in designing and building their home from enormous timbers and with great stone retaining walls in an isolated, wooded sector.

She laid out an organic vegetable garden that she boasts "was fabulous." It was set out in a formal design with 48 different kinds of herbs in the borders alone.

"I BAKED ALL the bread — and still do," she says. "I canned and froze hundreds of quarts of fruits and vegetables, made chutneys, vinegars and sparkling apple wines.

"All these things are very dear to me, and I still try to do as much as I can, although my present garden is much smaller."

She confesses to "an almost fanatical sense of order." But adds: "Of course, that is completely justified in the Oriental sense."

AND SHE SAYS she approaches everything "with this feeling of design, whether it be preparing food, keeping house, sweeping the paths and sidewalks, wetting down the garden and corral, selecting my dress."

Simplicity, "almost austerity," is the key to her way of life.

She says she loves to sew clothing, working without a pattern "and often just letting the shape of a piece or scrap of cloth or leather determine the finished product."

"I try not to waste anything," she says.

THIS TRAIT AND her knack for making things she attributes largely to "my creative father" who is now also an Inverness resident and engaged in making "the most incredible log cabin one could imagine."

Another special enthusiasm of Nancy Blunk is horses — "I'm a true nut on horses." At the home she now shares with her two sons who divide their time between their parents she keeps a horse she obtained eight years ago as a colt.

The horse is kept in a corral "about 10 feet from my kitchen window and we sort of talk while I do dishes." And Nancy, even in these busy days of preparation for the music festival, gets in a bit of riding simply by using the horse as her transportation between amphitheater and home. At St. Columba's, the horse grazes in the meadow while Nancy works.

ALONG WITH Fae McNally, Nancy Blunk does the bulk of the less glamorous work in preparation for the festival.

It may include the watering of the lawns or the hand addressing of nearly 2,000 mailers (a 20-hour chore) or the digging of post holes.

"It's the old story," she sighs. "Everyone wants to be a star, but when it comes to digging ditches, Fae and I wind up doing a lot of that. Last year we ended up taking down the set."

There are, however, some volunteers who assist — "I had a lot of good helpers in making the costumes for the soloists." And this year expert cabinetmaker Peter Worsley accepted the responsibility for constructing the set designed by Mrs. Blunk.

"BUT FAE McNALLY is the festival," Nancy insists. "He conceived of it, created it, thinks out every part of it, and keeps it going."

Her greatest fear, she says, is that the over-enthusiasm of some board members for continued growth for the festival might create a climate of high-pressure tactics "in the money-making, publicity-seeking sense."

This year's festival opens Friday night inside St. Columba's church with an 8 o'clock program of piano music for four hands by Fae McNally and Nancy Lyle Bennett.

NEXT SATURDAY at 3 p.m. there will be a program of contemporary music by members of the Mills Performing Group in the amphitheater, and that evening at 8 Margery Tede and Walter Matthes will sing Bartok's "Bluebeard's Castle."

In addition to "Bartered Bride," sung in English, in the amphitheater Sunday, Aug. 16, at 2 p.m., that day's program will also include a concert by the Marin Arts Quartet at 8 p.m. inside the church.

A special festival event on Saturday at noon in the outdoor setting will be a solemn high mass celebrating the Feast of the Assumption, with the San Geronimo Valley Singers directed by Darrell Parker.

THE FESTIVAL concludes Aug. 23 at 2 p.m. with the second performance of "Bartered Bride."

Then, says Nancy Blunk, "I am going to have to find myself some kind of a paying job."

That, for Nancy Blunk, with her strong personal convictions, is no easy undertaking.

"I could probably make a good living as a secretary or something," she says, "but I just can't function as a human being under the conditions in the business world. I would then cease to function as a person, as an artist and as a mother. So I would rather clean house for others. It is something I equate with ditch-digging as honest, 'organic' and useful work by which one can support oneself without guilt."

IN THE MEANTIME she is pleased that her two sons are happy in present circumstances. "They are acutely aware of their great, good luck in their environment," she says. "They are most sensitive to those who do not have these things, and they are most pleased not to live in the city, suburbs or town."

As for herself, Nancy Blunk says "I like to consider myself the complete artist. I like to think that I approach everything I do, including the most menial things, artistically. And I find that the people I feel closest to are the ones who demonstrate this same awareness.

"I have nothing in common with pseudo-artists, the price-oriented, 'arty,' faddists — especially women who I feel are creatively in competition with men as painters and sculptors.

"PERHAPS THIS is why I haven't painted for 15 or more years."

The Airlines Pamper Their Passengers

One Veteran Traveler Prejudiced For Planes

By MURRAY J. BROWN
UPI Travel Editor

In this air-oriented age of mass transportation, it is hard to believe that more than 50 per cent of the population of the United States has never flown in a commercial airplane.

It is even more remarkable when you consider that U.S. scheduled airlines reported carrying more than 159 million passengers in 1969. That figure, however, includes repeaters—travelers who made more than one flight—and foreign passengers.

Airlines industry sources have estimated the total of nonflying Americans at about 120 million. Others place it even higher, possibly closer to 65 per cent of the estimated population of 202 million.

IT IS THIS vast untapped market the airlines are depending upon to fill all those seats in the Boeing 747 Superjets and the other big, wide-bodied airliners which will come into service soon.

I have been traveling by plane on business and pleasure for years so probably I am prejudiced. For me, it is not only the fastest way to get where I am going (barring air controller slowdowns and weather or mechanical delays) but part of the fun of getting there.

And the price is right. While virtually everything else increased in cost over the past decade (the government's Consumer Price Index went up 28 per cent between 1959 and 1969), average air fares went down.

THE COMMERCIAL airlines industry is fiercely competitive. With scheduled U.S. domestic and international air fares fixed by agreements among the carriers and governments, each goes all out to outdo its competitors in the battle for the air traveler's dollars.

As a result, travelers by plane are probably among the most pampered passengers ever. Take eating and entertainment, for instance.

All meals are included in the price of the fare, except on certain thrift flights. They range from snacks and sandwiches to full-course meals, including cocktails, champagne, wines and liquors in first class. There is a charge for alcoholic drinks in tourist and economy sections but soft drinks are free.

TRANS WORLD Airlines serves meals on request during "normal" meal periods on its 747 flights. Pan American offers a variety of foreign national dishes on its overseas services while American Airlines gives passengers a choice of U.S. regional specialties on transcontinental hops.

United Airlines has Polynesian meals on its Hawaii runs and Braniff offers Latin American food and drinks on its south-of-the-border services. Eastern Airlines also caters to the "inner man" with selected American and continental dishes.

If notified at least 24 hours in advance, most airlines will provide specially-prepared meals to meet religious, dietary or personal preferences of passengers. Special menus for children also can be arranged in advance. And most planes also carry a supply of baby food.

INTERNATIONAL CUISINE accompanied by choice wines is one of the ways fiercely competitive airlines woo the passengers. The scene here is on board an APSA-Peruvian Airlines plane where the food has been prepared by chief chef Herman Duringer, formerly with the Hotel Crillon in Lima. APSA operates direct flights from Los Angeles to both South American coasts.

TO HELP while away the hours on the longer flights, airlines offer first-run movies and multichannel stereophonic sound systems among other diversions. TWA offers 747 passengers a choice between a restricted and general audience film—and you can pick your seat in a nonsmoking or smoking section, too. Pan American 747s also have sections for smokers and nonsmokers.

Reading and writing materials are provided free, as are games, coloring books, puzzles, etc. to keep the kids amused. Pillows and blankets are furnished free if you get tired of watching the movies, listening to music, reading or writing.

First class passengers usually get hot and cold towels, sleep shades, travel socks and other extras, such as toiletries and pocket-sized comb-and-tooth-brush sets, on long distance flights.

THE FOREIGN airlines also are competing for bigger shares of the American market on international flights with various gimmicks. Japan Air Lines provides first class passengers with happi-coats and soft-soled slippers; Lufthansa rolls out a real keg of beer on trans-Atlantic flights; and Air Jamaica's stewardesses put on a live fashion show way up there in the wild blue yonder.

Smoking: Can Be Harmful To The Pocketbook

Travel tip from Ambassador Tours Stan Pollard:

American cigarettes are expensive abroad, as high as 60 cents to 85 cents a pack. But each person is allowed to take two cartons of cigarettes duty free into most countries. Cigarettes may be purchased tax free aboard planes.

Fishing Off Jamaica For Marlin, Trophies

For fishermen in quest of the big catch, the Caribbean is the place.

And there is no better base from which to operate than the island of Jamaica.

Adding zest to the quest is that Jamaica is the scene of some of the area's most important international fishing tournament.

THE TOURNAMENT season begins in September, and will kick off this year on Sept. 7 when an estimated 200 anglers from the United States, Canada, Europe, Jamaica and other Caribbean points will battle blue marlin and wahoo for the trophies.

The tournaments starting on that date at Port Antonio, an Eden-like fishing mecca on Jamaica's north coast, is really a doubleheader — the eighth annual Blue Marin Team Tournament, and the 12th annual tournament for other game fish that include the sailfish, Allison tuna, wahoo, barracuda, kingfish and others.

This year 70 boats are expected to participate.

AND FISHING is only half the fun. There are receptions in the evenings and other pleasant after-fishing relaxation.

Detailed information can be obtained from International Fishing Tournament, Port Antonio, Jamaica.

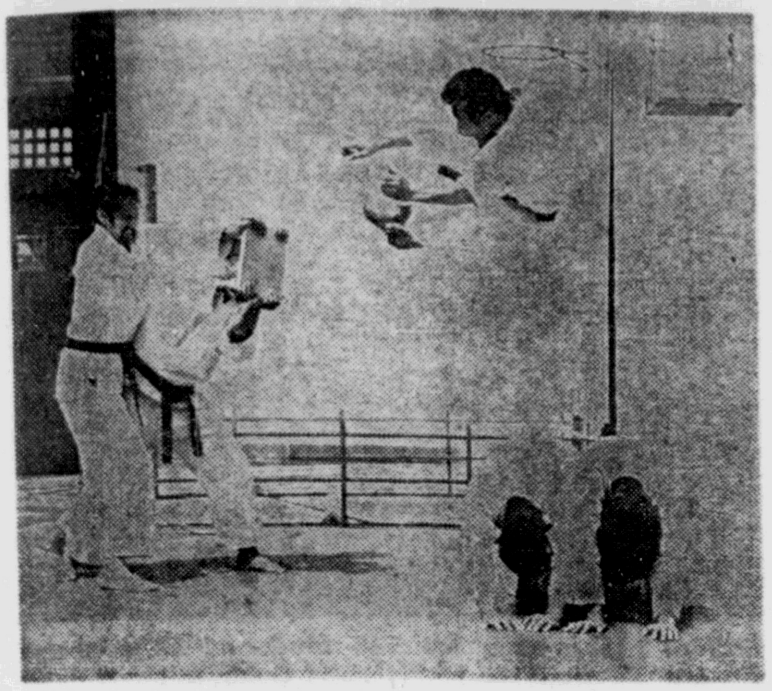
Dining In Other Lands



JAPANESE VILLAGE and Deer Park at Buena Park in Southern California, with attractions that range from the excitement of exhibitions by championship exponents of karate, top, to the serenity of the haunting music of the koto as played by Kimono-clad girls, bottom photo, is billed as "the largest Japanese cultural and recreational center in the Western Hemisphere." It is patterned after the renowned Deer Park at Nara, Japan. There's also a sea theater show with dolphins and sea lions, traditional Japanese dancing, the tea ceremony, garden settings, exotic foods and gifts from the Orient. The park, founded by Allen Parkinson, is open during the summer, through Sept. 13, 9 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. daily except Saturdays when it remains open until midnight. The village first opened in May, 1967, and has expanded rapidly since then.

If you are planning to travel abroad, American Express suggests making dining-out one of the highlights of your trip.

Sampling regional food specialties can be more than a delightful adventure in dining — it can truly enhance your appreciation of the country and its people.

Since the heritage of every country is reflected in its cuisine, familiarity with national dishes and distinctive ways of serving them is one of the things that make travel abroad rewarding. Every country has its traditional delicacies, and in many provincial restaurants the flavor of the region is often captured in the local costumes, folk music and dancing.

AMERICAN Express presents a few tips for becoming an international epicure:

1. Don't hesitate to ask the waiter what the specialties of the house are. Also what wines he recommends to accompany the dishes.

2. Check on the dining hours since they vary from country to country.

3. Don't expect instant service in every case — many dishes are cooked to order.

4. Make it a hobby to "collect" internationally known restaurants or off-beat bistros where ancient traditions flourish.

5. Collect books on foreign foods and wine to add an international flavor to home entertaining and cooking.

6. Shop for colorful table accessories to complement the recipes you may collect along your travels.

7. Do a little reading "homework" on the countries you'll be visiting, their native specialties and dining customs.

AMONG THE stimulating and informative books on the aesthetics of culinary sojourning are the following:

"Massee's Wine-Food Index" by William E. Massee (McGraw-Hill), more than 11,000 entries on famed national and regional dishes, fine wines and restaurants throughout the world; the "Alitalia Book of Authentic Italian Cooking" by Barbara Stacy (Thomas Y. Crowell), over 100 recipes; "Contemporary French Cooking" by Waverly Root and Richard de Rochemont, two well-known journalists and devotees of French cuisine (Random House), more than 400 dishes, hors d'oeuvres to desserts, and glossary of cooking terms; "The Wonder of Food" by K. Cyrus Melikian and Lloyd K. Rudd (Appleton-Century-Crofts).

Of interest to amateur gourmets as well as experts are: "The Fine Art of Chinese Cooking" by Dr. Lee Su Jan (Bobbs Merrill), the philosophy and art of over 22 centuries of Oriental cooking, containing more than 200 recipes and menus adapted to the American kitchen and supermarket; "Menus for Gourmets" by Andre L. Simon (Herbert Jenkins, London); "The Wine Country of France" by Edward Hyams (J. B. Lippincott); "Foreign Dining Dictionary" by Robert Jay Misch (copyright Misch and Browne-Vintners); "Mexico Through My Kitchen Window" by Maria A. de Carbia (Houghton Mifflin); "The SAS World-Wide Restaurant Cookbook" by Charlotte Adams (Random House); "Casserole Cookery" by Pamela Vandyke Price (Herbert Jenkins, London).

A COUPLE ENJOY a gourmet feast in an Amsterdam, Holland, restaurant, complete with fancy lighting for their table.

Robert Nathan's Engrossing Gem

MIA by Robert Nathan; Alfred A. Knopf, 179 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Dorothy Gardiner.

A little gem of a book by a master writer.

Robert Nathan weaves an intriguing tale around an aging novelist, Thomas Baggot, who has retreated to the desolate Cape Cod coast to write his autobiography.

Baggot, saddened that most of his life is in the past, meets Emmeline, a lonely middle-aged spinster who has rented the neighboring house. He also encounters a strange, young girl, Mia, who fascinates and yet puzzles him at the same time.

Gradually, Baggot begins to reawaken to life and the present as he finds himself drawn to the quiet, crippled Emmeline.

Nathan salts his tale with a dash of Salem witchcraft, a mysterious murder, colorful flashbacks into Baggot's fascinating life and vivid descriptions of a New England resort community in the autumn of the year.

The story itself is spellbinding with a surprise ending we won't spoil here.

Nathan uses his skilled pen to pull away the borders of time in "Mia" leaving the reader much to muse over in an era when so great an emphasis is placed on the generation under 30.

Parts of the book rise to allegory and this reviewer can't help but wonder if the book's startling ending isn't really a wry comment from the 76-year-old author on today's schism between young and old.

Nathan, whose earlier works included "Portrait of Jennie" in 1940, "So Love Returns" in 1958 and "A Star in the Wind" in 1962, has in "Mia" created an engrossing little book that leaves much to mull over long after it is returned to the library shelf.

THESE PHOTOGRAPHS, a preening pelican at left, and trio of baby bluejays at right, are by Leonard Lee Rue III and are included among the 140 black-and-white photographs in his "Pictorial Guide to the Birds of North America," published by Thomas Y. Crowell.

A Treat For The Birdlovers: The Scientific Data Plus Lore

PICTORIAL GUIDE TO THE BIRDS OF NORTH AMERICA by Leonard Lee Rue III; Crowell, 368 pages, $12.50. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Leonard Lee Rue III, naturalist, writer and photographer who did "Pictorial Guide to the Mammals of North America" earlier, has followed that success with this treat for birdlovers.

It is not to be confused with the pocket-sized manuals you can carry into the field and use in identifying quickly the feathered creatures you encounter along the way.

In the first place, the book is too hefty for that. In the second, since it includes a sampling of the species found over an entire continent, it is not complete enough regionally to cover all the varied California bird population. Finally, except for a "quick identification" color spectrum at the front of the book, the illustrations are not in color. And color sketches or photos are almost essential for the amateur attempting to separate the various look-alike species.

But what Rue has given us is a wonderful book for armchair enjoyment.

For more than 80 species, we are given the basic scientific descriptions and backgrounds. But more than that, Rue passes along a rich store of information and lore he has accumulated from his own personal experiences and observations. This is enhanced immeasurably by Rue's appealing writing style, denoting a true affection for birds and an enthusiasm for spreading that understanding.

Thus we are informed upon the courting habits of the red-winged blackbird, learn that the Baltimore oriole builds a stout nest capable of supporting nearly 18 pounds of lead weights, that the aggressive little house sparrow is largely responsible for the virtual disappearance of the bluebird, that the pelican so long regarded by fishermen as a rival and foe actually consumes almost entirely trash fish disdained by man, that poultry and game birds make up less than 2 per cent of the diet of the red-shouldered hawk who consumes immense quantities of harmful rodents, that the house sparrow will fight its own reflection in glass not just for hours for months, that the Arctic tern is especially valorous in defense of its nest and young, that the elimination of its prairie dog host has also brought about a decline in the numbers of burrowing owls, that the early-bird robin does, indeed, catch the worm, that the yellow-shafted flicker simply sticks out his tongue and allows ants to attack it and then slurps them up, that a parent glacous-winged gull will kill the chick of another if it chances into his territory, and much, much more.

The many photographs, taken by Rue, are splendid candid studies, many of them rare close-ups, that more than compensate for the missing color, disappointing as this lack is in a bird book.

"Pictorial Guide to the Birds of North America" is also a guide to continuing reading pleasure.

Henry Ford II Offers Ideas On Problems

THE HUMAN ENVIRONMENT AND BUSINESS by Henry Ford II; Weybright and Talley, 63 pages, $3.50. Reviewed by Harry Craft.

The author, a shrewed businessman and the head of one of America's foremost automobile manufacturers, has combined into one volume three of his short talks before Vanderbilt University, the Yale Students' Political Union and the Harvard Business School entitled "The Individual and the Establishment"; "Social Conscience and Profit"; and "Business, the Environment and the Quality of Life." Each deals with a slightly different aspect of the present social rebellion and its relationship to business.

In his first chapter, Ford takes a hard and realistic look at young people and other rebellious groups. He outlines the recourses they have in reshaping the world to give them more personal freedom, and the accompanying pitfalls.

"Social Conscience and Profit" suggests separating the responsibilities of government and business in solving underprivileged and minority group problems — with business undertaking to provide more and better jobs and higher incomes for no other motivating reasons than its own self-interest and profit. But Ford believes business is far less qualified to improve family life, raise educational standards or administer justice and should stay out of these fields, leaving them to political, educational and social agencies.

In "Business, the Environment and Quality of Life" he again emphasizes the profit motive of business giving people what they want in environmental improvements and in respecting public changes in values and expectations, carrying some of his projections into the future.

Ford's arguments are almost mathematically expressed and show a deep understanding of controversial issues.

Advice For The Short

HOW TO INCREASE YOUR HEIGHT by Dr. Charles W. Linart and August Blake; Arco, 89 pages, $3.95. Reviewed by Maxine Keown.

This small book by an orthopedic surgeon and a guidance counselor on how to become taller is actually a manual on the development of better posture. And that, it develops, is Dr. Linart's secret on how you can add inches to your height.

The book is devoted largely to some simple exercises — almost too simple, it seems — aimed at straightening the stance, with some advice on posture habits and nutrition thrown in. New vigor and fewer aches are promised as by-products.

The program certainly is not going to produce any miracles, but might very well be of some limited help to the person self-conscious about being short or stooped — particularly the latter.

Anthology Suffers From Familiarity

THE ENDS OF TIME edited by Robert Silverberg; Hawthorn Books, 225 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Wayne Ratliff.

Anthologist-author Robert Silverberg, in his introduction to this volume of eight short stories, accurately describes the collection as follows:

"It is science fiction about the far future, a kind of science fiction that is prophetic only in a visionary way. It does not spring from an analysis of trends so much as it does from dreams and fantasies."

This seems a good basis for a new anthology; the great bulk of science fiction is based on extrapolations of current trends in society, and science fiction short story buffs require little excuse for an anthology.

It does not, however, seem reason enough to collect stories already anthologized in hardcover, as four of the eight have been. One story, "The Awakening," by Arthur C. Clarke has been anthologized twice since 1955 in hardcover.

We have not read nearly enough science fiction in recent years to stay current in the field, yet we had read each story in the collection previously. It seems likely that some of the stories have seen too many magazine and paperback reprints to be included in the anthology.

A few of the stories were worth re-reading, and all of them rated a first reading.

Two short stories by Fritz Leiber, "Last" and "When the Last Gods Die," and one by the anthologist, "At the End of Days," are included in the collection.

Other stories included are "Alpha Ralpha Boulevard" by Cordwainer Smith, "Twilight" by John W. Campbell Jr., "Epilogue" by Poul Anderson and "Guyal of Sfere" by Jack Vance.

"Twilight" was published originally under a Campbell pseudonym, Don A. Stuart. Jack Vance is better known as Henry Kuttner.

Hardcover collections printed since 1955 in which stories in this anthology appear include "Time and The Stars;" "The Best from F and SF," 11th Series; "Reach for Tomorrow;" "Prelude to Mars" and "Beyond Tomorrow."

A Vendetta Is Charged Against The Bureaucrats Of The FDA

By DON KEOWN

THE DICTOCRATS: Our Unelected Rulers, by Omar V. Garrison; Specialty Features Syndicated, 333 pages, soft-cover, $1.25.

Obtusely entitled "The Dictocrats," muck-raker Omar V. Garrison's latest paperback expose also has been somewhat mislabeled by its publisher, who describes it on the cover thusly:

"A veteran reporter uncovers some startling shenanigans in our federal offices . . . "

Rather than shenanigans, it deals largely with stupidity and stubborn vindictiveness.

And Garrison's target is not all federal offices but almost exclusively the Food and Drug Administration.

But as much as the book is an attack upon the FDA, it is equally a defense of the controversial health food industry and unorthodox nutritionists.

Garrison's theme is that the FDA has carried on a relentless and unreasoning vendetta against the health food trade and against those lecturers and writers with whose nutrition theories it does not agree, while neglecting its other responsibilities of far greater public significance.

On page 169 he puts his case this way:

"The danger to the public lies not in harmless home remedies sold in health food stores. It lies rather in the large armamentarium of powerful prescription drugs about the proper use and total effects of which there is an acknowledged and widespread ignorance among the medical profession.

"Nothing ever recommended or sold by a health lecturer ever produced a piteous and heart-rending legion of deformed bodies as did thalidomide. No autotherapy employing vitamins and minerals ever resulted in fatal aplastic anemia as did doctor-prescribed chloramphenicol. No self-treatment with soybeans, lecithin, honey or rose hips ever caused serious kidney damage as have sulfanilomide and streptomycin."

The FDA, Garrison notes, continually explains its failures to perform its most critical functions — the thorough testing of new drugs and the control of tainted foods — by referring to its shortage of manpower.

Bluntly, Garrison suggests the agency re-direct some of the effort it now expends on prosecuting — or persecuting — with great publicity health food manufacturers and retailers, or lecturers expounding nutritional theories that do not comply with the official line that the normal American diet is adequate, toward its more vital and more pressing responsibilities.

To the reply that health foods and supplements might prevent the ailing from seeking urgently needed professional medical help, Garrison notes that there are other factors working to that same effect that are tolerated. Aspirins in the medicine cabinet, booze to relieve aches and tensions, religious beliefs, the too often exorbitant costs of medical care and medicines — is the government going to wage war on these as well?

As for the FDA's concern over money allegedly wasted by the public upon food supplements, Garrison asks: "When did it become the function of the government to tell us how to spend our money as long as what we buy is not injurious to us or others?"

If we are going to eliminate all wasteful expenditures, he might well have added, shouldn't we include the salaries of any number of bureaucrats who serve no useful purpose? How about cigarettes? Frivolity?

Besides, says Garrison, the case against what the FDA likes to call "nutritional nonsense" is by no means as clearcut as the bureaucrats, the American Medical Association, the food processors and their allies in science would like to have us believe.

There is, Garrison points out, a substantial, if minority, opinion, including a few within the AMA and many within science, that supports the belief that the American diet is seriously deficient, and that supplementary foods, vitamins and minerals are not only harmless but decidedly helpful.

Belatedly, he adds, the Establishment is coming to adopt, in whole or part, many of these minority stands.

Thus we have the sudden "discovery" that malnutrition is indeed widespread in this affluent land. Tardily, we have governmental concern expressed over the effects of DDT and other pesticides. The advantages of polyunsaturated fats over saturated fats win new supporters. A furor results when an expert witness testifies that most of our dry cereals do consist, as the non-conforming nutritionists have long insisted, of calories left bereft of effective vitamins and minerals by over-processing.

Garrison suggests that eventually many of these bureaucrats and their supporters who have pooh-poohed the superiority of honey to granulated sugar or of natural vitamins to synthetic vitamins will come around to embracing these ideas, too. Or, more likely, "discover" them as their own.

There is no indication that Garrison wrote his book under commission from the health food industry. But if he had done so, it is unlikely he could have done a better job for them.

Admittedly, it is a one-sided presentation, written with considerable alarm and scorn by a man who first took on the bureaucrats in an earlier book, "Spy Government." But it is also an effective presentation. Garrison would not have been able to land so many of the blows in his barrage if the FDA had not made of itself such an inviting target with its high-handed, big-brother-knows-best, hold-tight-to-the-status-quo approach to its responsibilities.

Garrison makes a valid point when he states that the Food and Drug Administration, as well as other federal regulatory agencies, were never intended to function as combination executive, legislative and judicial bodies plus censors and police, but only to oversee the execution of policies formulated by our elected officials.

He is on solid ground, too, when he asserts that the FDA and others should set aside their preoccupation with their own personal prejudices and their hunt for easy scapegoats and come to grips with the real perils to the public.

Just as the Federal Bureau of Investigation, belatedly, has finally begun to move against the real criminal menace, the Syndicate, so the Food and Drug Administration should turn its attention to the poisons that have been slipping through in products within its jurisdiction.

Americans, it would seem, are sufficiently mature to make their own choice between Post Toasties and wheat germ, between white and whole grain breads, between sugar and honey, between added vitamins and no supplements. They are, however, in no position to make that judgment when it comes to medicines, to additives in our foods and to the purity of the processing and packaging of our meats ond other edibles.

THE NEWEST book by Margot Patterson Doss, "The Bay Area at Your Feet" (Chronicle Books, $2.95, softcover), makes pleasant reading and no doubt even more pleasant strolling.

Mrs. Doss suggests 43 walks of special interest on the Peninsula and the North and East Bay areas, providing the historical and background information that will enrich those small adventures.

It is in the pattern of her earlier "San Francisco at Your Feet," "Golden Gate Park at Your Feet" and "Walks for Children in San Francisco," and of her newspaper articles that are among the best things to appear in the San Francisco Chronicle. With a most successful formula, Mrs. Doss, quite wisely, has decided not to tamper with it. And it works very well for her, once again.

A considerable number of Marin walks have been included — in the Point Reyes National Seashore, in Bolinas and along its lagoon, along the San Andreas Fault in Bear Valley, at Tomales Bay, around Bon Tempe Lake, in Sausalito and in Tiburon and Belvedere.

The illustrations, while well reproduced, are unexceptional in their selection. But it is Mrs. Doss' text that counts. And there, she has used her limited space most effectively in choosing just the kind of information that deepens one's appreciation of the places and people that make the Bay Area such a fascinating place for walking — and for living.

THE UNIVERSITY of Glasgow teacher of logic Robert H. Thouless wrote his "Straight and Crooked Thinking" back in the 1930s. Now, probably with the straight thought in mind that there is now a greater need for logic than ever, Hart Publishing Co. has reprinted it as a $1.95 paperback under the title "How to Think Straight." The theme is don't let emotion twist logic. Thirty-four dishonest tricks commonly used in argument are analyzed, but it seems to us the ones with whom we disagree utilize many more. As for our side of those arguments — why, pure straight-thinking, of course.

INTEREST IN astrology apparently continues unabated, and, indeed, seems on the upswing, as witnessed by a spate of books upon the subject. For addicts, "Astrology For the Aquarian Age" (Simon and Schuster, $7.95) by Alexandra Mark, is offered as THE do-it-yourself manual. The writer, wife of a Boston neurosurgeon, is a leading light in astrological circles. Her book is intended to equip the reader to draft his own astrological chart "based on his own biological clock." It's strictly for believers, which we are not. But a big, glossy and, we'll admit, persuasive book.

A NEW collection of Bill Keane's "Family Circus" comic strips, this one entitled "Wanna Be Smiled At?", has been published as a 50-cent paperback by Fawcett Publications. Followers of the fun-filled family cartoon in the Independent-Journal will be interested.

DEADLY PATTERN by Douglas Clark; Stein and Day, 169 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Fans of the classic English puzzle mystery can rejoice in Douglas Clark, for he writes in that tradition, and writes well.

"Deadly Pattern" is his third Detective Chief Inspector George Masters novel. This time Masters and his Scotland Yard team are summoned to a seacoast resort area where the bodies of four respectable married women have been found buried in the sand. A fifth such woman is missing. Using his brain, rather than the brawn that predominates in most of today's crime fiction, Masters first locates the fifth corpse, then unmasks the multiple killer.

The deduction is excellent, as are the setting and the characters. The abrasive relationship of Masters to his next-in-command adds a special fillup of interest.

THE KILL DOG by Jonathan George; Doubleday, 204 pages, $4.50. Reviewed by Don Keown.

The place and time for "The Killdog" are Czechoslovakia and the late summer of 1968 — a period of political crisis and eventually of the Russian take-over.

Jonathan George, a pseudonym for a British novelist, has, we are told, based his novel upon the actual experience of a Czech refugee.

Prof. Jan Melisek, anthropologist and outspoken foe of party oppression, has fled Prague, and is aided by a young English woman, Maggie Armitage, in crossing into Austria and freedom. Romance develops between the professor and Maggie. But Belisek finds he must return to Czechoslovakia, despite the danger, to solve a riddle he left unresolved. Maggie goes with him. And ultimately they must also work out a resolution to their own relationship that recognizes political realities. Better than average.

Leontyne Price As 'Tosca' Heroine, And An Intellectual 'Dr. Faust'

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—Leontyne Price seems well on the way to being as fully recorded a prima donna as Renata Tebaldi and Joan Sutherland. She has been heroine of many of RCA's recorded operas, and here she is as heroine of a "Tosca" by RCA's competitor, London.

It is a curious recording, with three aging singers in the principal male roles —Guiseppe DiStefano, Giuseppe Taddei, and Fernando Corena. None enjoys a former vocal estate but all are adequate as stimuli and props for Miss Prince's stunning flight over Tosca's vocal trajectory.

Evidently the recording was made in 1967 or before and only now is being released in the United States, perhaps due to a contractural release covering the use of Miss Price. The chorus and orchestra were that of the Vienna State Opera and the conductor was Herbert Von Karajan who de-Italianized the score to the degree of taking some tension out of it (London-1284).

AFTER FIRST reading the libretto and then hearing a recording of Ferruccio Busoni's opera "Doctor Faust" you will understand why he has a small coterie of awed admirers but no real following among contemporary patrons of music.

It's his libretto and his telling of the Faust legend is poetical but fantastic and laden with philosphical implications. Intellectualism gets little house in music now and evidently didn't in Busoni's time. "Doctor Faust" has never made the grade as a repertory opera. Its score has weight, at times a Bachian weight, at others just heaviness.

It was made by German singers and a German chorus and orchestra under Ferdinand Leitner. Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau took the part of Faust and Karl Christian Kohn sang Mephistopheles, both most satisfactorily. It was a studio performance, of course. This is not an opera house opera (Deutsche Grammophon 2709032.).

THE LATE Arturo Toscanini tried often to popularize Respighi, and here is Leonard Bernstein taking up the chore with "The Pines of Rome" and "Roman Festivals." His orchestra was the New York Philharmonic (Columbia-7448). The reviewer was enthralled with the tape version of Erich Leinsdorf's enhancing interpretations of parts of the "Tannhauser" score and the suite from "Der Rosenkavalier" (London-Ampex 75037).

Pop Records—A Bobby Vinton

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER

NEW YORK (UPI)—Bobby Vinton began his career as an instrumentalist and band leader but switched to singing on a whim.

Vinton told UPI in an interview several years ago that the singer in the band he was leading was making more money than he was.

"He wasn't a very good vocalist," Vinton said. "I couldn't sing either but I thought I could do better than he was doing."

Vinton got off to a good start for a beginner and soon had made a name for himself among the new singers.

Now, several years later, Vinton returns to instrumental music on an album, "Sounds of Love" (Epic BN 26542).

Vinton does not attempt to dominate the music, thus his saxophone interludes are modest but more than adequate.

All the numbers are in slow tempo, giving the Vinton sax the romantic effect he intended to achieve. Among them are "Raindrops Keep Fallin' On My Head," "I'll Never Fall in Love Again," "A Taste of Honey," "I Will Wait for You" and "Somewhere, My Love."

Other pleasant instrumentals may be heard on "Raindrops Keep Fallin' on My Head and other Academy Award Winners" (RCA Camden CAS-2411) by Living Strings, Living Bras, Living Jazz and the Melachrino Strings and Orchestra. Numbers include "Sweet Leilani," "Never on Sunday," "It Might As Well Be Spring," "The Last Time I Saw Paris" and "Call Me Irresponsible." Bob Armstrong, Mel Davis and Malcolm Dodds are also featured.

SELECTED SINGLES

"Groovy Situation" by Gene Chandler (Mercury 73083), "I Want to Take You Higher" by Sylvanus (Uni 55235), "Togetherness" by Buck Owens and Susan Raye (Capitol 2791), "Close To You" by Carpenters (A&M 1183), "Doomsday Afternoon" by Earth Island (Philips 40673),

TAPE DECK

"Empty Rooms" by John Mayall (Polydor 4010), an Ampex tape release, is full of good sound. Mayall seems to be ever present either on vocals, guitar, moog or harmonica but he receives excellent support from Johnny Almond on reeds and flutes, Jon Mark on 12 string guitars and Steve Thompson and Larry Taylor on bass guitars. Mayall is involved creatively in all 12 compositions.

SOME NEW READING FOR THE JUNIORS

The very title of "Pumpernick and Pimpernell" (Doubleday, $4.50) by Lilo Fromm, award-winning German author and artist, sounds a promise of fun for the 8-year-olds and younger.

It's a rollicking tale of two gardeners, the title characters, whose peaceful existence is disturbed by a sudden deluge of strange and unwelcome visitors.

The two eventually outwit the invaders, and then with the help of their dog, Pudding, take precautions to avert any more such intrusions.

The story is unusual and imaginative, and so is the very colorful artwork, somehow reminiscent of Black Forest and the Brothers Grimm characters and moods — all very European.

Some other new books for the juniors:

Marguerite de Angeli has been writing and illustrating books for children since 1935 and has an impressive list of classics and near classics to her credit. One of her finest is "Up the Hill" which was published in 1942 and has now been reissued (Doubleday, $3.95). It is a tale loaded with old-fashioned charm about a Polish family in a Pennsylvania mining town at Christmas time, maintaining the customs of their old country even as they learn about those of people from other distant lands and adapt to the ones of their new home. Warmly told and beautifully illustrated.

Joan Aiken, daughter of Conrad Aiken, has carved out a successful career of her own as a writer, specializing in children's fiction. "Smoke From Cromwell's Time" (Doubleday, $3.95) is a third collection of her stories for 12-year-olds and up, with the emphasis upon magic and miracles. The result is a varied assortment of nicely-told pleasers for young fantasy fans.

Robert B. Jackson, a veteran writer of books about automobiles and auto racing, tells the story of the Indianapolis Speedway and its 500-mile Memorial Day classic in his "Championship Trail" (Walck, $3.75). However, it is not a history of that event, but rather a chronicle of a single season with car owners, drivers, mechanics and others involved in the sport pointing toward Indianapolis where their efforts all come to a climax. The year is 1968. Jackson's writing does not strike sparks, but is adequate. Action and character study photographs, splendidly reproduced, illustrate the book.

"Turn Back For a Glove?" (Walck, $4.50) is a collection of poems by Gregory Harrison with a contemporary ring that might well strike a chord with young readers. The subject matter is varied — nature, a river, a diesel train, a castle, a motorcyclist, the gray squirrel, a TV documentary, etc. Sometimes the mood is peaceful. And sometimes it is anything but peaceful. Most young people today take their poetry set to music. Harrison's seems more for recitation. But it is undeniably effective.

Tips on Purchase and Home Care of Your Wardrobe

MARIN CLEANERS Phone 454-4792—Member N.I.D. of San Rafael, Bel Aire & Fairfax

"What Spotted My Knit Dress?"

As you indicate, your dress was not cleaned by a professional. It was cleaned in a coin operation. The process involved in such cleaning is the cause of the "spots" or color loss in your knit dress. The miss-use of a pre-spotter on especially soiled portions, before cleaning, is the cause. Pre-spotters have definite place in cleaning badly soiled garments; but the one using the spotter should know dyes and colors or just be lucky on certain garments.

In the situation with your knit dress, overgenerous use of a pre-spotter, immediate cleaning and failure to follow pre-spotting instructions, caused the color change in the pre-spotted areas. May I suggest that professional care would have avoided your trouble?

Versatility Of Vines Includes Their Use For Climate Control

There are many vines that, trellised, espaliered or grown upon a fence or wall, contribute spectacular beauty to the landscape with their magnificent bloom and appealing foliage.

Vines will also serve as a privacy screen for your outdoor living areas. And reduce the glare of sunlight upon a patio or terrace, an attribute that is appreciated particularly during the summer months.

AND AS A source of shade, they serve effectively as well as a means of climate control.

Darker foilaged vines tend to absorb heat, while lighter foliaged varieties reflect it. The most obvious use in controlling climate is a trellis, arbor or in natural growth where the vines reduce the amount of sunlight reaching a given area.

Marin gardeners have a host of evergreen and deciduous vines to choose from. The latter shed leaves in winter which permits the sunshine to pour through.

YOUR NEARBY nurseryman has a collection of both types — and more important, he will have the varieties proven to be reliable in your area.

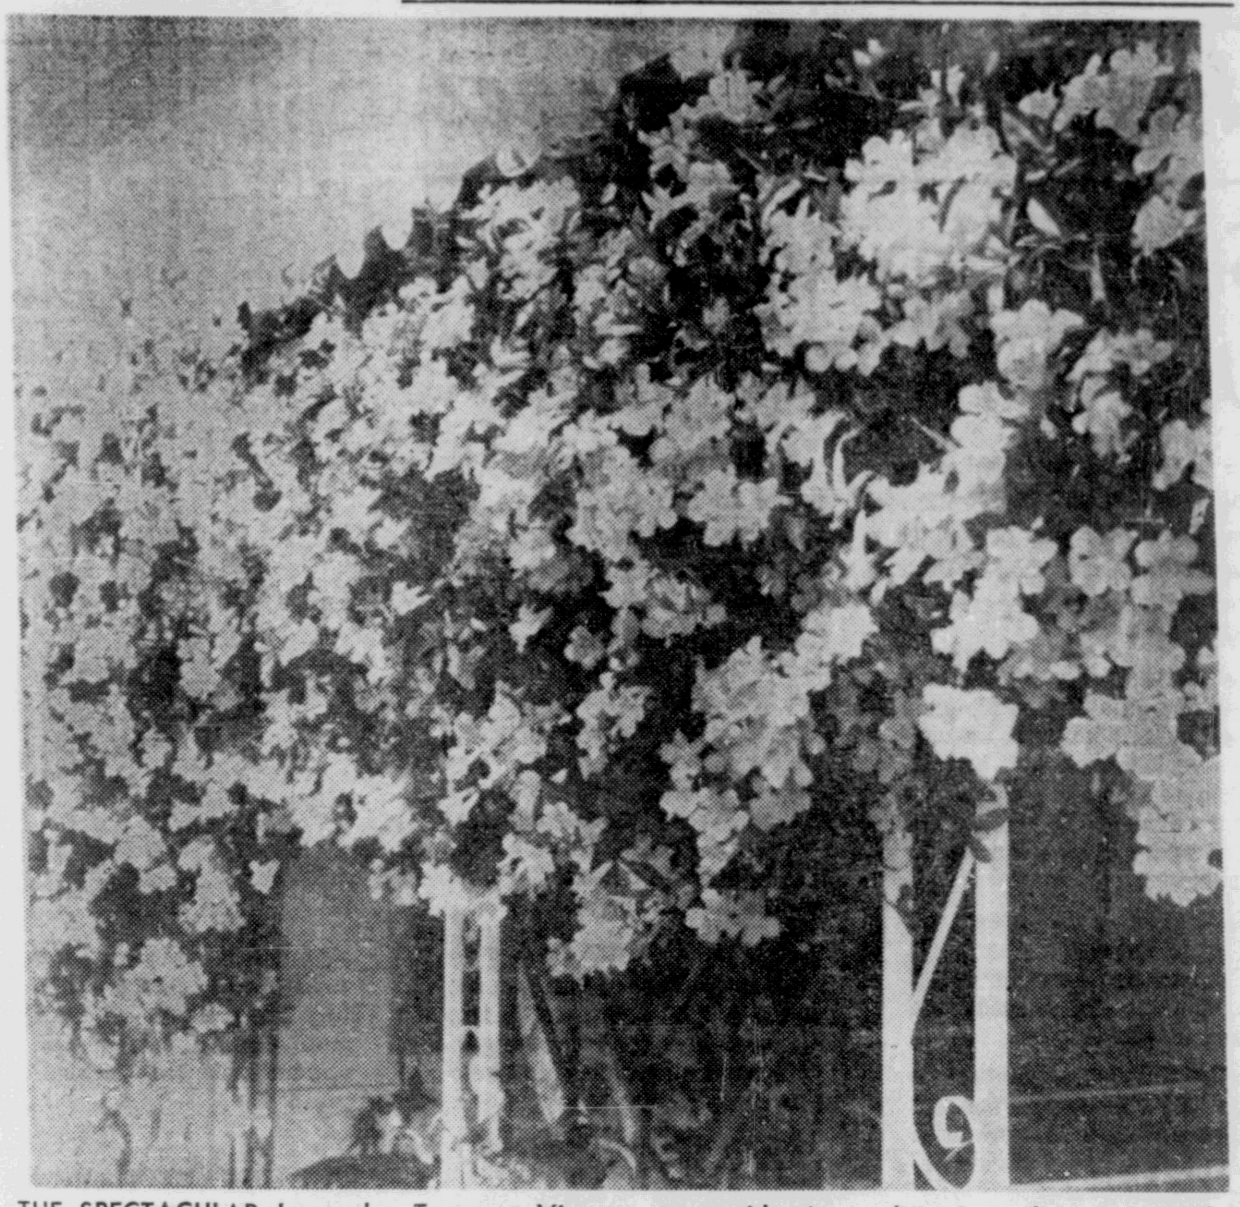
One of the most popular all-purpose vines is Star Jasmine. It has fragrant white flowers which adorn rich, dark green foliage. Use it on a trellis or against a wall — or as a spreading ground cover plant.

Countless yellow blooms and lacy, light green foliage highlight the Carolina Jessamine which is a logical choice for arbor or trellis. Against a redwood fence, the color combination is handsome.

Lavender Trumpet Vine is another attractive choice. And Bougainvillea is still another.

IN OUR COASTAL gardens where winter temperatures aren't at all severe, such spectacular-bloomers as Passion Vine, Burmese Honeysuckle, and Handevilla (Chile Jasmine) are used extensively for beauty and climate control. Inland, plant them in a protected spot.

If you're not familiar with all of the vines mentioned, visit your nursery and get acquainted with them — they're as lovely as the names are intriguing. Shopping may reveal a choice of Clematis vines, Wisteria and Virginia Creeper. These are vines Grandma used to grow. They are every bit as beautiful and dependable today.



THE SPECTACULAR Lavender Trumpet Vine serves splendidly as an example of the versatility of vines. Along with a dazzling display of summer-time blooms, it also provides you with air conditioning when you need it most. Note how the vine has been trained to break the glare of the sun and shade occupants of the porch. (Photo courtesy of California Association of Nurserymen)

When Trees Turn Pale

Iron needed for production of chlorophyll may be lacking if your trees appear to be pale green this summer.

Many trees suffer from "chlorosis," that may be caused by concrete. Building concrete, hunks of sidewalk and driveway, cinder and old bricks buried two-to-three feet below a lawn can inhibit shade tree development, experts tell us.

These materials generally are buried as fill when a house is built. The debris may harm trees gradually. As it decomposes, the dissolved materials move upward in the soil, often causing excessive alkalinity in locking up the iron normally available in soil.

Copper, zinc, boron, or phosphorous, also necessary elements, may be tied up the same way. The lack of iron and inadequate chlorophyll checks tree growth and food reserves.

A well-balanced feeding with the necessary elements will help.

The Natives Are Accustomed To California's Long, Dry Summers

Native California shrubs, being used to our long, dry summers, have built-in resistance to drought which keeps them looking hale and hearty even with neglect.

When planted in the garden, especially on dry slopes and hillsides, they keep up appearances where other plants may not.

This does not imply that natives are to be used in the garden only when poor conditions exist. Many natives have also learned to live with normal garden conditions.

IF YOU WOULD enjoy the beautiful benefits from them, August is a good time to plant natives, says the California Association of Nurserymen.

Most widely adapted to garden use are several members of the Ceanothus family — the "wild lilacs" seen from San Diego northward. Our own Point Reyes Ceanothus hugs the ground and creates a carpet of rich green. Lavender blue flowers are a springtime sensation.

Carmel Creeper is another Ceanothus ground cover. It has larger leaves that form a mounding cover up to two feet or more in height.

OTHER CEANOTHUS varieties are more shrub-like. Their handsome foliage and blue-lilac-like flowers look natural in the far reaches of the garden.

Varieties to consider are such hybrids as Mountain Haze, a six footer which bursts forth with a blanket of light blue flowers each spring; Sierra Blue, a larger shrub in size and bloom; and Julia Phelps, with deeper blue blossoms.

Check your nurseryman's selection to see what enjoyment is in store for you.

WHEN NOT IN berry, the Toyon (California Christmas Berry) is a fine shrub that fits into today's landscapes where a large-growing specimen is required. Its winter crop of red berries is beyond description.

The big, sturdy Fremontia, with dazzling yellow-to-gold blooms, has been a favorite for years. Plantsmen have recently introduced hybrids that will tolerate garden conditions and withstand some pampering.

Fremontia is best where it doesn't get extra attention, such as frequent waterings. Like all natives, they are undemanding, durable and most natural in a California garden.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

Here is the Marin gardener's checklist for the coming week:

✔Take long stems when you cut your roses to renew the established bush. Feed roses if it has been a month since the last time. This will promote fall bloom.

✔Quick color can be found this month from lantanas. Give them the sunniest exposure you have.

✔If you need a handsome parkway covering, try Aaron's beard (Hypericum calysinum). In summer it is a mass of bright yellow blooms.

✔Most of us remember to water our lawns in summer. But do you remember to feed your lawn as well? It's important.

✔This is an ideal time to plant citrus trees, both standard and dwarf size, for fruit and fragrance.

✔If you water frequently, you are creating the kind of environment in which snails and slugs thrive. So keep your bait replenished to control these avaracious pests.

Sunshade Adds Flair, Utility To The Patio

As the warm months move along, even new home owners know where they can best place a sunscreen in the yard to filter glare and catch any cooling breezes.

Consider a garden shelter consisting of a small lounging deck, backed by an open port for children's vehicles and toys or folding chairs. Topped with a spaced and tilted sunscreen roof, it's sure to prove a family favorite.

The family work crew will need little more than hammer, saw, square and level for tools; nails, some bolts, cement and lumber, of course.

Size of this deck-sunscreen is up to the builder. Four-foot modules are easy to work with figuring that as the distance between deck stringers.

BEAMS FOR THE sunshade may be slightly longer than the deck's width to allow for the slope, and also extend back to cover the storage area.

Finishes Optional

Finishes are optional and not required on some wood sidings.

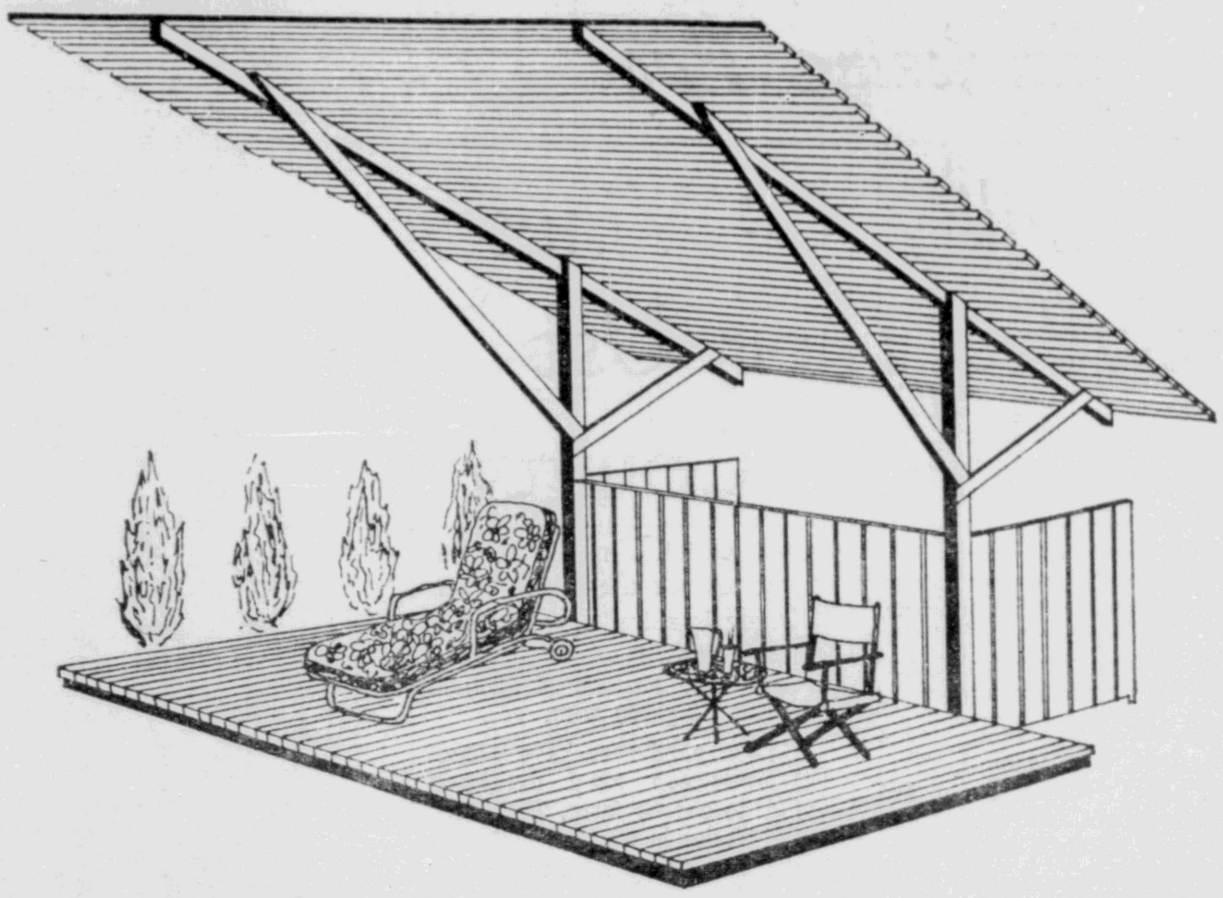
Decide which direction you'd prefer to run the deck boards, and your support stringers will be laid the opposite way. Four-foot intervals are adequate; if two-by-six inch stringers are used, they may extend eight feet between pads.

Level stringers over concrete pads set on firm earth, and posts if needed. Nail two-by-six blocking crosswise between stringers. Space slightly the deck boards, preferable two-by-fours flat or on edge.

TO ADD THE sunscreen, position four-by-six inch posts on the back side of the deck, set in two or more feet from the edges. Fill around posts with concrete to increase rigidity.

Prepare two-by-four beams and braces for bolting to each post, tilting the beams to slant the screen backwards. Fasten a few one-by-two inch slats across the beams near the ends.

Then lower roof assembly to ground for easier nailing of all the slats. Space slats across the beams over the deck to filter light and butt them solid over the storage area. Roll roofing here would complete the shower proofing.



A SUNSCREEN that shades a small deck will add greatly to the utility of that outdoor living area, especially during the warm summer months. Here roof boards have been spaced over the deck so as to filter the light.

LIFT COMPLETED assembly into place and bolt to the posts. Then fence between posts and enclosing sections to either side. Fence style can be plain board, board-on-board or louvered.

For a deck close to ground, pressure-treated western lumber for stringers is advisable. The structure needs no finish to weather naturally.

But the same idea using solid boards can be used to provide weather protection for an outdoor storage area. The fence that will hide toys, small vehicles, power mower, etc., can be made board-on-board, louvered or some other fencing design.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, says the American Iron and Steel Institute, you can nail into steel as readily as wood. Here a carpenter nails plywood subflooring directly to a steel floor joist. Versatile, factory-fabricated steel components are figuring more and more in construction from structural framing to roof shingles. And you can even hang pictures or heavy mirrors on screws inserted directly into steel studs.

Tree Roots In Pipe? Here's What To Do

Big, healthy trees are nice to have around your home, not only because of the natural beauty they lend to the landscape but also because they help to prevent soil erosion.

However, the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau points out, they can create a real problem when their thirsty roots get into your pipe.

TREE ROOTS are strong because they have a deep instinct to live. They spread in all directions, seeking out life-giving moisture. If there's a leak or a break in your underground pipe, they'll find it.

Then, before you know it, your pipe becomes clogged, requiring corrective measures.

The most effective way of dealing with the problem calls for the tools and services of a plumbing contractor. He'll use a special flexible auger that can be reeled into the pipeline, cutting away all growth. This definitely is not a job for an amateur, since improper use of the auger can break the pipe and worsen your problem.

SPECIAL ROOT solvents also can be flushed through the line to clear it.

These corrective measures are only temporary, however, since the thirsty roots soon will find their way back into the pipe. The only sure way to avoid a root problem is to make certain the pipe is of top-quality, water-tight material. Strong as tree roots are, they can't break into good-quality pipe.

When it comes to your pipeline, quality doesn't cost — it pays!

A Brochure That Helps With Home Modernization

Some 17 billion dollars will be spent on home modernization this year, according to the Bureau of Building Marketing Research.

More than 15 million homeowners will do most of the work themselves, spending four billion dollars on materials. Much of the modernization will center on new and improved kitchens and bathrooms. Most popular do-it-yourself projects will be lighting fixtures, floor tiles and wall paneling.

Home owners can get help in remodeling and interior and exterior decoration in a new brochure called "New Dimensions in Living". It's available for 25 cents from the American Hardboard Association, 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill., 60606. The illustrated booklet lists uses and application methods for hardboard wall paneling, and modernization ideas for kitchens, bathrooms, living rooms, recreation rooms, additions and exterior siding.

Scratches Covered

Scratches can happen to wood paneling, but don't worry. Use a dab of furniture polish stain, applied with a soft rag. Blond polish is right for hemlock and pine, dark polish for western cedar. Rub the polish stain in, then wipe. Repeat until colors match.

Partitions For Needed Privacy

Two children occupying the same room are entitled to some privacy for work, study and play.

You can create this situation in a sizeable bedroom by installing a functional divider wall large enough to provide each child a separate study-hobby space.

Inexpensive and quite easy to intsall, the divider's structural members are two-by-four-inch lumber spaced 16-inches apart and nailed to floor and ceiling runners of the same dimension material.

To each side, the craftsman can nail sheets of prefinished perforated hardboard. The panels make a good looking backdrop and a suitable spot for hanging shelves, clock and hobby items.

On each side can be hung a working surface made by covering a rectangular framework of one-by-two-inch lumber with tempered hardboard. Cross members should be 16 inches apart.

WITH THE woodparts primed and painted and the surface shellacked or varnished, the desk provides an excellent surface for study or hobby.

Be sure the desk is anchored to the studs forming the backbone of the divider and fitted with wood supports angling into the divider at the floor.

Dividers made of lumber and hardboard can be mounted underneath. Fluorescent lighting above will illuminate the area adequately.

A Utility Board For The Kitchen

Even in the most modern kitchen, a utility board is a convenience and necessity.

A handy one, about 20 by 24 inches, can be cut from Masonite Tempered Presswood. This hardboard product is splinter-free, extremely smooth and moisture resistant.

It won't absorb odors, either, and can be cleaned easily with a damp cloth.

Such a board, with its corners rounded and edges lightly beveled with a sandblock or file, has various uses in the kitchen and about the house. Here are a few:

For rolling pie crusts.

To protect table tops from extremely hot dishes, or from being scratched by sharp cutlery.

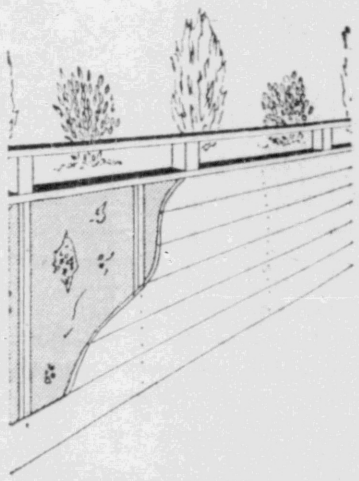
As a sandwich or salad board.

For cooling hot pies or cakes.

For a lapboard on which to write letters or jot down menus.

As a surface for cracking nuts or doing small kitchen repairs.

FACE-LIFT



CONCRETE retaining walls will take on glamor when they are faced with wood siding. Nail one-by-two inch red cedar boards to one-by-two furring strips and add a decorative cap if desired. The result: an amazing transformation.

Thoughtfully designed by Raymond Sobota, Chandelle typifies the kind of furniture you'll find in the country manor or larger homes of the rich noblesse or successful bourgeoisie in contrast to metropolitan or court furniture. Styling has abundant references to three centuries of French furniture designs.

You'll appreciate the rich carvings and motifs, the beauty of the heavily-distressed, carefully antiqued fruitwood finishes. Very desirable too, are painted pieces in sunny, interpretative colors.

Sharing prominence in our bedroom is the Louis XV style, six-drawer, two-door 74-inch triple dresser and the rococo-influenced carved bed. You'll like the three convenient trays behind door compartment of generous sized chest-on-chest.

Chandelle also features such interesting alternate selections as the lofty armoire sketched here. Both on-leg and to-the-floor stylings are available in this beautiful collection.

Phil Silvers Misses Sgt. Ernie Bilko

By CLIVE RUSSELL
London Express Staff Reporter

LONDON—Phil Silvers swallowed a huge mouthful of cheese omelette and considered my question. "What sort of a guy am I? Well, that's a pretty tough one right now."

He paused again and then admitted: "Look, I'll level with you. I'm not being' cute about this, but the truth is I don't really known. I'm not an idiot. I've won just about every award there is in television; but I still don't know who I am.

"Basically I think I'm a decent man, but very destructive to myself. At one time I used to be the fun of the party, but for the last few years I've been too withdrawn. I'm coming out of it now, though I still don't mingle like I should."

FROM THE LIPS of a man the world remembers as the brash, irrepressible Sgt. Ernie Bilko, such self-analysis is joltingly out of character.

But the fact is that behind the lovable rubber-ball face and those memorable staccatto quips is one of nature's most distinguished melancholiacs.

At 59 Phil Silvers, quintessential American comedian, has not yet completely recovered from the untimely demise of the bouncing wheeler-dealer from Fort Baxter. Ernie Bilko, the character who made his name a household world from Sydney to Cincinnati, represented the zenith of his "show biz" career. And the slide down the other side of the hill is, he frankly admits, pretty hard to stomach.

HE TALKS SADLY about the show: "We were a happy group of guys, you know. Men get on with each other professionally so much better than women — there's no jealousy about who's got the prettiest dress.

"We were at the height of our rating when it finished. You see, it was a very expensive show and nobody policed it moneywise — the average situation comedy has five people, while we started with 24.

"The network just wasn't making enough money on it. I guess they looked at their balance sheets, saw how much it was costing them and decided to chuck it. Of course they're sorry now because they've made 500 times the money they put into it then."

BUT EVEN IF Bilko was resurrected, Silvers wouldn't return. "In show business you can't go back," he says. "I couldn't rise to it again. It would have to be an entirely new program."

Alas, there are no new programs in sight, so these days Silvers has to be content with guest appearances on television shows. It brings him a comfortable living with a palatial bachelor pad in Beverly Hills, but not the satisfaction he yearns for.

"Comedy is the toughest of the arts," he says. "If you're a singer, right now all over the world there's somebody writing something you can sing. But they ain't writing comedy.

"You've got to give the comedian a point more tolerance than the dramatic actor. When you're in a straight play and it's good, you have the assurance that the audience are there because you're a star. At the end of the show you can hear the applause, and next day you can read the reviews.

"BUT IF YOU'RE doing comedy, what assurance have you got that they're going to laugh tonight? Silence you can always buy, but not laughter. That's why most comedians, including myself, are inclined to be a little neurotic."

I asked him what makes a good comedian? "Usually, someone from a minority group," he replied. "Someone who's sensitive and aggressive at the same time.

"You've got to remember, there's a big difference between a comic and a comedian. A

PHIL SILVERS
Actually a melancholiac

comic is a man who stands up and tells jokes. A comedian is an actor who plays a scene.

"I'VE NEVER DONE stand-up comedy much. I'm essentially an actor. In fact, the stage is the only place I feel at home now. Phil Silvers offstage is a reserved, withdrawn man. But on the stage . . . . Boy, that's my cocoon."

It's almost ironic that someone who loves the live theater so much should have made his name and fortune on television.

"Yes, I guess so," Silvers agrees. "But actually I like television and I appreciate its great power. All the road and broadway shows I've done don't equal one appearance on TV.

"ANYWAY, IF I like a scene I can play it to the wall, although I do wish more of the shows were live. The gambler in me likes to take the chance that there might be a flop, that I might make a mistake.

"It's so antiseptic when you record things. You become too relaxed and too dependent on cue cards."

Modern show business is a tame affair compared to what it used to be, says Silvers. He remembers his own baptism with nostalgia.

"I was brought up in a section of Brooklyn known as murder incorporated. It was a real tough neighborhood and half the kids who went to school with me ended up in the electric chair.

"I'LL CONFESS TO you, I spent half a year in a reform school myself. Somebody said I hit a monitor on the school steps, and I was so proud of it I didn't deny it — in my neighborhood it was a badge of merit to go to reform school.

"From the age of 13 I consciously wanted to go into show-business — although nobody in my lineage had ever been backstage. I sang at the various social clubs in Brooklyn. Mostly run by gangsters, they were — and the audience used to throw money at me for tear-jerkers like 'Break the news to mother, Tell her how I love her . . . .'

"Then my voice broke and I was forced into burlesque at Minsky's On Broadway. It was a rough, spicy business and savage for comedians. The audience was there to see the girls, and to make your presence felt you had to be funny real fast.

"WE USED TO do 30 shows in a weekend, and you had to make your own material. But it made a man of me comedy-wise."

Silvers paused and silently reflected on the contrast between Minsky's and the orderly opulence of London's Borehamwood Studios — where he was rehearsing for a spot on the Andy Williams Show. Then he changed the subject abruptly.

"I love England, you know. It started when I was a little boy in vaudeville and I met the great British stars who came over to the states — people like Nervo and Knox, and Will Hay.

"Whenever I gave interviews in America and they asked me what my favorite city was, I'd always say London - even though I had never been there.

"THE IRONY IS that even now I've never done a live thing in Britain. I've been invited to about four Royal command performances, but always had to turn them down because they came in the middle of my shows on Broadway.

"Somebody who should know told me that that the queen used to watch the Bilko show whenever she could. I just couldn't be more thrilled at the thought."

He is also a cricket fan. "You know, a friend once took me to Lords and they made me an honorary taverner. One of the commentators there who was obviously anti-American said to me 'What do you think of our boring old game?'

"I SAID: 'LISTEN, the only boring thing around here is you. This is the most important match of the year, and you're reporting it like it was a sewing circle.'

"I gave my commentary American fashion, and you know, they used it later on the BBC. Next day the London cabbies told me they'd never enjoyed cricket so much."

He loves British policemen too, and fondly recalls a visit to Hyde Park corner during the Arab-Israeli war.

"There was this Arab speaker whipping up hatred against Israel and the Jews and getting more and more vicious with every breath. Now I'm Jewish, as you know, and I could feel myself really boiling up inside listening to this guy.

"THE CROWD WAS in a nasty mood and I was getting real frightened. Suddenly a guy in a trench-coat moved up beside me and then another fellow moved in on the other side.

"They started nudging me and I thought 'This is it.' I was just getting ready to take a swing at one of them and then make a run for it when the guy on the left whispered: 'We don't want anything to happen to Bilko, now do we?'

"They were both British detectives. My God, was I grateful?"

Cease-Fire Effective In Mideast

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

Guns fell silent along the Suez Canal for the first time in 17 months today, the first day of a cease-fire that United Nations Secretary General Thant hailed as a step toward Middle East peace.

Israel said Arab guerrillas broke the calm twice, however, in the opening hours of the 90-day truce.

An Israeli military spokesman said Arab guerrillas sabotaged a section of railroad line in the Gaza Strip early today and also fired several rockets into Israel from Jordan.

Israel has warned it may retaliate if any of its Arab neighbors break the cease-fire, but there was no report of any Israeli response to the two incidents today. They were the first reported breaks in the truce on any Middle East front.

Palestinian guerrilla groups have vowed not to observe the cease-fire.

The Israeli spokesman said a 400-yard section of railroad was sabotaged near the Gaza Strip village of Khan Yunis. Several rockets arched in from Jordan a few hours later near the Biblical city of Sodom. The rockets caused no damage and Israeli forces in the area did not return the fire, the spokesman said.

The truce cleared the way for the second phase of the proposal offered by Secretary of State William P. Rogers June 19. Rogers suggested indirect talks between Israel, Egypt and Jordan overseen by Gunnar V. Jarring, the U.N. Middle East peace mediator.

At the United Nations, Thant said, "this marks, in my view, an important step forward in the search for peace in the Middle East. It is a beginning, a welcome first step."

Israeli Premier Golda Meir went on radio and television to pledge her country would maintain the truce "meticulously in all their provisions on the basis of reciprocity."

She cautioned her people against over-optimism.

"With all our profond desire that the cease-fire—and not only on this front alone—should be the first step toward peace, we must remember that our road to peace is a long and hard one," Mrs. Meir said.

Defense Minister Moshe Dayan said, "If violations are committed against us, we shall have to decide in accordance with those violations whether to lodge a complaint about them or to tell the other side: 'if you shoot, we shall also do so'."

Informed political sources said Israeli and Egyptian jets would carry out air inspections of each others front line areas without actually crossing the canal in order to keep other surveillance.

In Cairo, the Egyption Foreign Ministry announced the cease-fire and said, "the arrangements which were reached after extensive consultations are considered to be acceptable from the United Arab Republic's viewpoint."

The announcement said Egypt had agreed to the freeze on arms buildups along the canal as a condition of the truce.

Arab guerrilla leaders denounced the cease-fire and said they would go on fighting.

The Action organization for the Liberation of Palestine said, "We shall not abide by the cease-fire. We shall violate it with all our strength."

Link To Soledad Brothers Race Issue Undetermined

Yesterday's murderous shoot-out at the Marin County Hall of Justice obviously was plotted in advance. But, authorities still aren't sure — or aren't saying — whether the getaway try that cost four lives can be linked to racial demands to "free the Soledad brothers" or to other militant schemes.

(See other stories and pictures, pages 2, 3, 4, 8 and 21.)

Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley, 65, was shot to death while being held captive by a teen-ager and three San Quentin convicts. Also killed in a shoot-out that brought near-panic among many of the more than 2,000 persons in the Civic Center shortly after 11 a.m. yesterday were:

James D. McClain, 37, San Quentin inmate being tried in Haley's court on a charge of assaulting a San Quentin guard and apparent leader of the gang.

Jonathan P. Jackson, 17, of Pasadena, the outsider who brought weapons into Haley's courtroom that sparked the violence.

William Arthur Christmas, 27, San Quentin inmate who was a witness in McClain's trial.

Another convict and one of the band's hostages was wounded and two other hostages treated for shock.

Still in critical condition today at Marin General Hospital is Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas, the hostage who is said to have grabbed a gun from one of his captors inside the van and shot two or three of them. He was hit by three bullets, and suffered a severed spinal cord, a tear in his heart's lining and other injuries.

Doctors said after extensive surgery that Thomas may never be able to walk again. While lying wounded at the shoot-out scene yesterday, he took on-lookers that he could feel nothing below the waist.

Juror Maria Graham, 48, of San Rafael, is in good condition at Letterman General Hospital in San Francisco, after being treated at Marin General for a gunshot wound in the right arm. She was one of the three women hostages the gunmen took along in their escape try.

Another juror, Joyce Rodoni, 25, of Point Reyes Station, was

Last Rites Monday For Haley

A Memorial Mass of the Resurrection will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Monday at St. Sylvester Catholic Church in San Rafael for Marin Superior Court Judge Harold Joseph Haley, 65.

Rosary will be recited at 8 p.m. tomorrow at the church, 1115 San Pedro Road. Friends may call at Keaton's Mortuary, 1022 E Street, San Rafael, between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. tomorrow.

Burial will be at Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Judge Haley's death yesterday ended a 37-year career of public service in Marin County.

The San Rafael native was appointed an assistant Marin district attorney in 1933, five years after receiving his law degree from the University of San Francisco and admittance to the bar.

He served as acting district attorney from 1943 to 1945. In 1947 he returned to private practice, and in 1949 was appointed city attorney of San Rafael. He was reelected to the post in 1951 and 1955.

In 1956, he was appointed to the municipal court bench, and won reelection in 1958 and 1964 before being promoted to Marin Superior Court in December 1964.

Judge Haley, of 156 Peacock Drive, was a former chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Marin County; past president of the Marin County Bar Association, Community Chest and Mount Tamalpais Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West, and past chairman of the Marin County Catholic Social Service board.

Surviving are his wife, Gertrude Haley; three daughters, Patricia Davis, Carol Atkinson and Joan Fennone, and 10 grandchildren.

The family prefers contributions to Hanna Boys Center in Aqua Caliente, Sonoma County, or to a favorite charity.

Who Began Shooting Remains A Mystery

The question of who fired the first shot in yesterday's Civic Center melee that left Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley and three others dead remained a mystery today.

In a press conference this morning, Sheriff Inspector Ronald Retana said his department believes an inmate inside the escape van fired two shots at San Quentin guard John W. Matthews and the guard returned the fire with a rifle.

However, the Independent-Journal was told today, it was a shot from outside the escape van that caused one of the escaping inmates to trigger the shotgun blast which killed Judge Haley. The sawed-off shotgun had been rigged with a loop which had been placed around Haley's neck early in the escape attempt.

When the shotgun blast killed Haley, Ast. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas, a hostage in the van, grabbed a gun from one of the inmates and killed at least two and a possible third, in a close-quarters gun battle in the truck, the I-J was told.

When the first shots rang out, lawmen ringing the van opened fire and Retana today said that a total of 12 or 13 shots was fired. It is not known whether Thomas was hit by bullets fired by peace officers or by inmates inside the truck.

Retana said yesterday that the deputies had been ordered not to try to stop the escape vehicle which carried the trio, an accomplice and four hostages.

Retana said today he didn't know if the San Quentin guards had received the same orders and said he thought their radios used a different frequency.

Judy Swaney, secretary in the county elections office, said first thing she saw after the firing began was one of the convicts, seated in the front seat, slumped over. She added that the van had stopped and the firing began.

Another elections office employee, Kenneth L. McKay, said he heard muffled shots and then a barage of rifle fire.

"Shots were rirocheting in our direction, on the dirt underneath us," he said, adding he then sought shelter.

"I don't know what started the shooting," Retana said. "It's possible that a shoot-out took

MARIN COURTS WILL CLOSE IN TRIBUTE

Superior courts in Marin will close Monday in tribute to Judge Harold J. Haley, who was killed in a break for freedom by San Quentin prisoners yesterday.

Municipal courts will be closed in the morning, but Presiding Judge Peter Allen Smith said his department would conduct the criminal calendar and traffic matters in the afternoon.

E. Warren McGuire, presiding judge of superior court, ordered that all regular business on the calendar for Monday be transferred to a future date.

Reagan Orders Probe Into Court Tragedy

Gov. Ronald Reagan and an official of the state Department of Corrections have ordered immediate investigations into yesterday's courtroom abduction and slaying of Marin Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley, but there seems to be no reason the tragic incident couldn't be repeated when court reconvenes next week.

The correction official, chief deputy director Laurence M. Stutsman, called the tragedy the "worst in the history of the department and in the history of the courts."

Marin County's judges and law enforcement officials have no ready answers on how to prevent the violence that left four persons dead and three others wounded at the Civic Center.

No one was searched and there was no armed peace officer in Judge Haley's courtroom yesterday. The same situation will prevail Monday.

"You can't search anyone anytime you want to, "Deputy Sheriff Leo Ballard said yesterday. "It's an illegal search."

Ballard is head bailiff — in charge of men responsible for order in the court. As usual, there was one unarmed bailiff in Judge Haley's court yesterday. There were also four unarmed San Quentin guards. Five orther guards were outside the courtroom. They, too, were unarmed. All were unarmed for the same reason: a gun can be taken away.

"What good would a gun do? asked Ballard's boss, Sheriff's Lt. Newall Snyder, chief of the jail division.

Snyder said he doubted there would be changes in court security. It will be up to the judges to order them, he said. Neither Snyder nor Ballard want armed guards in the courtroom. Prisoners overcoming a guard may get his keys but not a gun, they said.

Yesterday's desperados didn't need guard's guns. They brought their own.

Marin County judges were also at a loss on how to prevent a recurrence of yesterday's incident.

Courts here face unusual dangers, most agreed, because the Hall of Justice serves San Quentin Prison and its inmates.

Superior Court Judge Thomas F. Keating recalled that similar episodes have been narrowly averted in the past.

"The danger's always there and always has been, " he said.

In an earlier case involving trial of San Quentin inmates, someone outside the court smuggled in guns and taped them under the counsel's table in the old courthouse in San Rafael.

"These things have been dis-

FROM S.F. STATE

New Sonoma State President

By BONNIE BARD

Earl W. Jones, right-hand man to S.I. Hayakawa, president of San Francisco State, yesterday named acting president of Sonoma State College.

State College Chancellor, Glenn S. Dumke, said the appointment would be effective Monday. Campus officials said Jones was expected on campus Monday for meetings with faculty and staff.

In making the appointment, Dumke said, "In a careful weighing of matters involving Sonoma State College and its future well-being, I have concluded that the college's best interests will be served by the immediate appointment of an acting president with the full power of the office."

The state college board of trustees had been scheduled to consider the appointment of a new president at its meeting in September.

"Preparation for the 1970-71 academic year is an important period at all state colleges, "Dumke said." I am pleased that Earl Jones has accepted the acting presidency at a time that encompasses this period of planning.

"Mr. Jones has demonstrated great skill and administrative grasp of academic issues at San Francisco State College. I am confident Sonoma State College will benefit from his many insights and ability," Dumke said.

Jones, 49, will succeed Dr. Ambrose R. Nichols Jr., who resigned the presidency effective last month.

The college has been the scene of many student demonstrations in the last year. Its troubles were recently compounded by charges at the state level of mismanagement. Chancellor Dumke ordered an all-out investigation of the college on July 28 and sent a six-man team onto campus.

Even the college's search for a president has been rocked by controversey. Early in July one of the student members of the selection team resigned, claiming that other committee members began the selection process already in favor of James B. Enochs, the college's vice president.

The release of Enochs' name as a candidate forced Dumke to delay appointment of an official president at the July 14 meeting of the state college trustees.

Jones will serve as acting president of the college until a new campus head is named, probably late this year or early next year.

Last year Jones was named by Hayakawa as assistant executive vice president and then executive vice president.

Jones said he was honored with the appointment. "There are few opportunities in our culture these days that are more exciting, more challenging, or more important than those that exist in the administration of higher education."

"Sonoma State College is ideally situated to provide a highly constructive educational experience for its students and service to an important surrounding area, as well as the state as a whole," he said.

The new acting president has been at San Francisco State since 1954, initially as a part-time associate professor of music. He became a member of the college's academic senate in 1967.

Jones received his bachelor's degree in 1942 from Ithaca College, N.Y. He received his master's degree from Indiana University in 1948 and has completed additonal graduate work.

He served as chairman of the division of fine arts at Union College in Kentucky from 1950 until 1952, when he moved to California.

A resident of Burlingame, Jones served as director of music at the First Methodist Church from 1952 to 1954. He was umsic editor for the San Mateo Times from 1954 to 1962.

Indians Threaten Coast Guard Fight

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—The Indian occupants of Alcatraz have threatened to put on their war paint if the Coast Guard tries to restore the island's lighthouse.

The Indians, who have held the abandoned federal penitentiary since last November, vowed to fight the Coast Guard unless the federal government resumes water and electricity services at the same time.

"They'll have to remove us or come over if we don't get the water," said John Trudell, a spokesman for the ruling will continue to operate the light with a gosaline-powered generator. They relit the beacon shortly after the Coast Guard cut off power May 29 and have kept it going sporadically.

The light was turned off after a federal caretaker abandoned the old prison and the Coast Guard announced offshore warning buoys would replace it. But fishermen and other mariners complained absence of the light was a hazard to navigation and the Coast Guard announced Tuesday it would restore the 126-year-old landmark.

However, the Indians blocked crews trying to land Thursday, saying they wouldn't be welcomed until the island's huge water barge was returned. The barge was removed by the General Services Administration at the same time the light was extinguished.

Thomas Hannon, regional administrator for GSA, responded that it is "not in my power to provide services to anyone other than government employes" on the island.

Salinas Growers May Face Strike, Boycott

SALINAS, Calif. (UPI)—Cesar Chavez is threatening a strike and boycott against Salinas Valley growers in retaliation for the firing of 400 workers who refused to join the rival Teamsters union.

Chavez's AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee and the independent Teamsters are engaged in a battle to sign up workers in this vegetable-growing area.

Chavez said Friday the strike would make his five-year battle with grape growers "look like a picnic." He warned it was only "hours away" after the 400 workers were dismissed.

The Teamsters stunned the farm workers union late last month by signing contracts with 30 Salinas Valley growers. The contracts require employes to join the Teamsters within 10 days.

Chavez described the contracts as "a stab in the back" and vowed to fight the Teamsters organizing efforts.

However, the Los Angeles Times reported Friday the farm workers union and the Teamsters were close to an agreement to settle their differences.

The Times said it had learned from one source that a verbal agreement had already been reached. But another source said that "progress has been made, but there are still some complications. But, while the whole thing could collapse at the last minute, I think there will be a formal agreement by next week."

According to the report, Catholic churchmen, presumably the bishops committee of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops which played an important role in settling the grape strike, pressed both sides in the dispute to get peace talks started.

In Salinas, Chavez said growers have been firing workers for about a week and began discharging full crews Thursday.

He said a "large number" of the fired workers were employed by Freshpict Foods, Inc., a Salinas-based subsidiary of Purex Corp.

In Oxnard, Freshpict's northwest division manager, Daryl Arnold, confirmed the firings. "It's not our doing," he said. "It is the Teamsters forcing terms of the new agreement. Workers can't go into the fields if they are not members of the Teamsters."

Chavez said the "situation looks very good for a strike."

"We could be hours away from an all-out boycott and strike that would make the grape thing look like a picnic," Chavez said. "We are much stronger and have more experience than we did five years ago. We're not going to let them get away with this."

Hippies' Suit Filed Against Unfair Arrest

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A federal court suit Friday requested an injunction which would stop Berkeley police from treating "hippies" as "prisoners of war in an occupied country."

The suit was filed by Youth Law Center in San Francisco and Berkeley Neighborhood Legal Services on behalf of any "hippie" who has been or might be arrested in the city.

It charged that at least 300 juveniles have been arrested in Berkeley since July 9 as part of a police effort to "clean up" the city by ridding it of persons under 18, particularly those who affect a "hippie" appearance.

For the past month, Berkeley police have been arresting minors from out of town and either jailing them or sending them back to their parents. Nearly 500 youths have been picked up under laws requiring minors to be under parental control.

The suit charges such action violates eight constitutional rights.

A hearing on the requested injunction was set Tuesday before U.S. Dist. Judge Lloyd H. Burke.

THEY TOOK THE PICTURES

I-J photographers Jim Kean (left) and Roger Bockrath review the day's events after taking the dramatic series of pictures of the Hall of Justice abduction and slayings. Both risked their lives. Bockrath was shot at and Kean was threatened by a prisoner brandishing two handguns. The photographers have received inquiries from newspapers and magazines from as far away as London and Brazil about their experience and use of their pictures. I-J Publisher Wishard A. Brown said today, "Today it takes courage to be a reporter, guts to be a photographer and dedication to be a newspaperman, and I salute Jim Kean and Roger Bockrath for an outstanding newspaper job."

Defense Fails To Crack Up Tate Witness

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — During seven days of cross-examination defense attorney Irving Kanarek has constantly hammered the veracity of Linda Kasabian's story of the Tate-LaBianca murders.

But during a break in Friday's session, Assistant District Attorney Vincent Bugliosi said he was convinced of the truth of the 21-year-old blonde's statements. He said her testimony tallied exactly with a statement given and later retracted by defendant Susan Atkins.

"I listened to the account of both girls, and Miss Atkins has recanted her story and said it isn't true. But it turns out that Linda Kasabian tells exactly the same story. How in the world can these two girls have invented exactly the same story?" he said.

Most of the afternoon session was devoted to legal maneuverings in the chambers of Superior Court Judge Charles H. Older and, at the end of the day, the prosecution agreed to a defense request that it formally petition the court next week to grant Mrs. Kasabian immunity from prosecution for her testimony.

The defense maintained that Mrs. Kasabian's testimony might be "tainted" in favor of the prosecution so long as she was liable to prosecution for the murders.

Bugliosi said he was satisfied she was telling the truth and would continue to do so. He said the state was agreeable to granting her immunity now, on the condition that she continue to testify in the case and in any follow-up matters.

During the morning session, Kanarek continued to deluge Mrs. Kasabian with color photographs, taken by police, of the victims of the massacre at the Tate estate.

She burst into tears when Kanarek showed her a color picture of the body of Voityck Frykowski, who was stabbed more than 60 times and shot during the rampage last Aug. 8.

She gasped "Oh, God," then turned to stare at the four defendants — Miss Atkins, Leslie van Houten, Patricia Krenwinkle and the man accused of masterminding the slayings, Charles Manson — and silently mouthed "How could you do that?"

The four sat impassively and did not reply.

"Why are you crying now?" asked Kanarek.

"I just can't believe it," she replied.

"You can't believe what?"

"I can't believe they could do such a thing."

"Are you sure you don't mean that you couldn't do such a thing?"

"I know I didn't do it. I didn't have it in me to do such an animalistic thing."

Army Drops All Projects For Presidio

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Rep. William S. Mailliard says the Pentagon has agreed to suspned all plans for new construction at the San Francisco Presidio.

The San Francisco Republican urged Friday that the ban remain in effect until completion of a study of all federal lands in the Bay Area for possible inclusion in the proposed Golden Gate National Recreation Area.

Mailliard's legislation for the recreation area proposed inclusion of portions of the Presidio, Fort Mason and Fort Miley in San Francisco and Forts Barry, Baker and Cronkhite in Marin County.

Suspension of Presidio construction halts the proposed building of a new school — which has been opposed by neighborhood groups — and a high-rise hospital, hundreds of new housing units and possibly enlarging approaches to the Golden Gate Bridge.

Regents' Faculty Pay Cut To Face Lawsuit

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—The California State Employes' Association has filed suit in an effort to restore a 5 per cent pay raise for state college and University of California faculty members.

The action, filed in Los Angeles Superior Court Friday, charged that $18.6 million to finance the raises was deleted by the legislature as a punitive and politically motivated measure.

RESULT OF TREATY?

West Allies Hopeful Berlin Tension Dies

BERLIN (UPI)—Western Allied officials said today they hoped the nonaggression treaty between the Soviet Union and West Germany would result in a Big Four agreement to lessen tension in Berlin.

They noted a report from Moscow that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko privately assured West German Foreign Minister Walter Scheel the Soviets would take a more benevolent attitude on Berlin when the Big Four ambassadors meet here again next month.

The American, British and French ambassadors to West Germany and the Soviet ambassador to East Germany adjourned their talks for the summer after six meetings in which no progress was made toward solving rhe 25-year-old Berlin problem.

They held their last meeting July 21 and agreed to meet again in September at a date to be set later.

Western officials said Pyotr A. Abrassimov, Soviet ambassador to East Germany, had shown no sign of willingness to compromise in the talks that began March 26.

They said Abrassimov's atitude at the next meeting might give an indication if the Soviets really plan to change their tactics in Berlin.

Western officials said some pressure would be on Abrassimov because West German leaders have said the treaty concluded today will not be ratified unless some progress is made in the ambassadors' talks.

The Western Allied ambassadors have proposed an agreement to end East-West German harassment of traffic to West Berlin, restoration of East-West Berlin telephone service cut by the East Germans in 1953, and the right for West Berliners to pass through the wall to East Berlin.

Until now Abrassimov has blocked such agreements by asserting that such matters must be taken up with the "sovereign German Democratic Republic.

He said such problems are beyond the competence of the ambassadors.

WORLD NEWS IN BRIEF

Texas Schools Sued

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Nixon administration has gone to court to force the integration of the last big block of southern school districts still maintaining a dual school system.

The Justice Department Friday filed suit in federal court against the state of Texas and 26 of its school districts, asking that they be ordered to carry out desegregation plans when school starts three weeks from now.

Only 18 school districts in the South are not now in compliance with integration laws or engaged in some form of litigation or negotiation with federal authorities, the Justice Department said. Seven are in Georgia, there are five each in Virginia and Tennessee, and one in Louisiana.

Flights Delayed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — United Air Lines reports delays at New York and Chicago of up to an hour, but there's no air traffic controller slowdwon. This time it's the pilots.

It was learned Friday the Air Line Pilots Association ALPA is staging the "WOE Program" — for "withdrawal of enthusiasm" — against the airline because it failed to reach a contract agreement with ALPA.

The slowdown is being engineered by pilots moving slowly along taxiways, nitpicking insistence on immediate correction of minor repairs and any other methods they can think of.

Belfast Flares Again

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — Gasoline bombs hurled from a speeding car today broke the calm that had settled on Northern Ireland after eight consecutive nights of rioting.

British troops used nausea gas to disperse about 50 youths throwing rocks at them before dawn in the Roman Catholic area of Bogside and Londonderry, northwest of Belfast, an army spokesman said.

In Belfast, five gasoline bombs were hurled from a speeding car at a match factory in the Catholic Donegal Road area but caused little damage, police said.

The army said no other incidents were reported since Thursday, the first violence-free night after eight nights of rioting in Northern Ireland.

Purge Charged

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — The state's key witness in the trial of Black Panther Lonnie McLucas testified Friday he believes fellow party member Alex Rackley was slain during an alleged party purge instead of for being a police informer.

George Sams Jr., told a Superior Court jury, "My reason for why Alex Rackley was murdered was to make a lot of young people in New Haven straighten up and also as revenge for the New York 21."

Sams was referring to the arrest of 21 Panthers in New York last year for an alleged 1968 plot to bomb police stations, railroad tracks, department stores and the Bronx Botanical Gardens.

Farm Bill Expected

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Nixon may have on his desk by Labor Day a bill to set the first limit on individual crop subsidies.

Chairman Allen J. Ellender, of the Senate Agriculture Committee said Friday he expected his committee to report the general farm bill for 1971 through 1973 to the Senate floor by Aug. 18. He said there was a chance the Senate could pass it before Labor Day.

House and Senate conferees already are trying to work out an individual farm sibsidy limit stipulated in an appropriations bill. The Senate wrote a $20,000 subsidy limit into its version.

In the new general farm bill, the House has written a $55,000 ceiling and Ellender said in an interview he expects to get the higher figure through the Senate.

Astronaut To Tour

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Astronaut Frank Borman leaves Monday for another world tour, but this time as a government representative seeking humane treatment and release of American prisoners of war in Indochina.

Borman made his first world tour after his Apollo 8 spacecraft, which he commanded, made the first manned orbit of the moon in 1968.

President Nixon appointed Borman, now an executive of Eastern Air Lines, as his personal representative Friday to seek third-party assistance in behalf of 1,500 Americans listed as missing or captured in Southeast Asia.

Borman's first stop will be Moscow. He'll also confer with U.S. peace talk negotiators in Paris and will travel to Sweden, Poland, Switzerland, Algeria, India, Laos, Thailand, South Vietnam, Japan and Canada.

Charter Approved

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A new city charter which would increase the power of the mayor and council and impose controls on independent departments has been approved by the City Council for placement on the Nov. 3 general election ballot.

By a 12-3 roll call vote Friday, the council approved the final charter resolution and asked the Board of Supervisors to consolidate the new streamlined charter.

If supervisors decline, the measure would have to be deferred until next spring's municipal elections.

The proposed charter specifies the mayor as the "executive officer" of the city, with the council its "governing body."

Playhouse Gone

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The famed Pasadena Playhouse, which gave many well-known actors their first break, is gone.

The financially troubled facility was sold at auction to the Bank of America, the only bidder, Friday, for $285,675.47.

The theater's financial troubles came to a head four years ago when the Internal Revenue Service padlocked the doors because the management failed to pay $31,000 in employe withholding taxes.

Strike End Urged

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Calling it a very unusual strike, Gov. Paul Laxalt has urged workers at the Nevada Test Site to cross picket lines and return to work next week if their unions held signed contracts.

The strike began more than two months ago when contracts covering 10 unions and 2,000 employes expired June 1. It has since caused the delay of at least two underground nuclear weapons tests at the site, the heart of the United States underground testing program.

Ruby Keeler's Return To Stage Brings Back Fond Memories

By JACK GAVER

NEW YORK (UPI) — The announcement that Ruby Keeler, dancing star of popular musical movies in the 1930s, is to return to the stage in the fall in a revival of 1925's "No! No! Nanette!" certainly stirs up some thoughts.

For one thing, it is a reminder that 1943's "Oklahoma!," which aroused some comment with its one exclamation point, was no pioneer in that area.

IT ALSO REMINDS one that Vincent Youmans, the "Nanette" composer who died too soon in 1946, was one of Broadway's great ones, on a par with Kern, Gershwin, Rodgers and so on. A debonaire, sophisticated fellow who knew both hits and flops.

When you hear "Tea for Two" and "I want to be Happy" that's the "Nanette" Youmans. Also his are "Great Day," and 'Time on My Hands," "Rise 'n Shine," "Sometimes I'm Happy," "Hellelujah," "More Than You Know." "Without a Song" and "Oh, How I Long to Belong to You," standouts in other shows with which he was connected.

way in the 1920s when it was not unusual for female teenagers, even in their quite early teens, to get their starts in musicals or nightclubs. A couple of others who come easily to mind are Paulette Goddard and Barbara Stanwyck.

MISS KEELER WAS 13 when she appeared in the chorus line of "The Rise of Rosie O'Reilly" in 1923. In the next few years, her looks and dancing feet earned her "name" roles in "Lucky" and "The Sidewalks of New York."

Then, in 1929, came the leading role in "Show Girl" for none less than the great Florenz Ziegfeld, and linked to that was her romance and subsequent marriage with Al Jolson, who, in his time, had a stature in show business that no one else —but no one —has ever achieved. In the next decade, Hollywood made Miss Keeler famous.

"Show Girl" — more memories there. It brought Jimmy Durante and his sidekicks, Lou Clayton and Eddie Jackson, out of the Prohibition Era nightclubs into the legitimate theater, and Durante went on from there.

THE COMPOSER of "Show with lyrics by brother Ira; the pair just beginning to come into the greatness that was to include "Of Thee I Sing" and "Porgy and Bess."

What else in that 1929-30 season? Helen Morgan in the Kern-Hammerstein "Sweet Adeline," a "juvenile" named Humphrey Bogart in "It's a Wise Child," George M. Cohan in his own "Gambling," Gertrude Lawrence and Leslie Howard in "Candle Light" (they don't make 'em like those any more), the aforementioned Youmans' "Great Day" (and would you believe Billy Rose as the lyricist of "Great Day"?, that wonderful "Berkeley Square" with the previously saluted Leslie Howard, Noel Coward's "Bitter Sweet" with that marvelous Evelyn Laye, a play entitled "Broken Dishes" that started Bette Davis on her way, Marc Connelly's monumental "The Green Pastures," the dynamic "The Last Mile" that sent Spencer Tracy to film fame.

There are other fond memories of that season that saw Miss Keeler become a star, but I've suffered enough in recalling the above. With apologies to Francois Villon (and Dennis King), where are the shows of

DEATH ENDS DARING ESCAPE TRY

The body of one of the four men — who broke for freedom yesterday from the Marin County Hall of Justice — lies crumpled over the shotgun and carbine used in their fatal venture. Two of the other men and Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley died when gunfire broke out as this get-away van was halted near the Civic Center. Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas was wounded as was one of three women jurors abducted with the judge and Thomas.

Reduced Bail Denied Drug Suspect Pair

A bearded young Washington State businessman and a young woman who declared to the courtroom yesterday she "works for God" yesterday were denied reduced bail on pending narcotics charges.

Municipal Court Judge Peter Allen Smith ordered the $5,000 bail on each to remain in effect until Monday to enable the district attorney's office to prepare complaints against Cathy Marie Brownell, 20, of 139 Bayview Avenue, San Rafael, and Russell Carl Ellis, 25, of Centralia, Washington.

The two and a 17-year-old boy were arrested Thursday night by county drug abuse bureau and state narcotics agents in a raid at the Bayview Avenue address. Four other persons were released, agents said.

Ellis, who heads a firm that makes fiberglass bodies for sports cars, was formerly a psychologist and juvenile worker, his attorney said.

The district attorney's office explained yesterday it had been unable to finish complaints because of the furor over the death of Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley and three kidnapers at the Hall of Justice late yesterday morning.

The man and woman were booked on suspicion of possessing and offering for sale dangerous drugs. Agents' reports detailed finding marijuana, hasish and what appeared to be LSD in the house, and marijuana plants in a car at the house.

Hydrofoil Begins Shakedown Runs

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The hydrofoil Pegasus I has started a series of shakedown cruises on San Francisco Bay.

The Hydrodyne Marine Corp. of San Francisco and Port Hueneme, said Friday tests would continue throughout the month. The company proposed using the vessels for commuter trips on the bay.

The firm plans to make a proposal to the Golden Gate Bridge District.

Salaries Anger Marin Management Workers

By WAT TAKESHITA

Top level employees in Marin County government, from County Administrator Alan Bruce on down, will send a bitter letter to the board of supervisors Tuesday, charging "epochally unfair treatment" for not getting pay raises just because they had no union representation.

The letter concludes with a warning that unless the pay of management and mid-management employees is reconsidered, all the county's top brass (except elected officials) will be forced "to exercise our legal right to organize for collective bargaining."

The letter is singed by almost 100 employees in the management category, including Bruce and his entire staff, and department heads such as Donald R. Frost of public works, Werner Von Gundell of planning, Dr. Donovan O. Cooke of medical, Betty Presley of public social services, Chief Louis J. Bloom of county fire, and all other unelected department heads.

A total of 138 management and mid-management employees were bypassed for raises during budget discussions, while 862 others got raises because they were represented by bargaining units.

If the management group, including Bruce and his staff, were to join unions, the county would be left without a negotiating team to bargain with employee organizations and unions.

Attached to the letter is a list of pay brackets showing that managerial employees are not necessarily the highest paid among county staff. For example, the letter said, pay raises went to six who are getting more than $1,551 per month, five drawing more than $1,350, and seven getting more than $1,150 per month, all because they belonged to bargaining units.

Among managerial employees, 96 who are getting $1,150 or less received no raise. Some of them, getting $550 to $650 per month, received no raise, whereas a half dozen in the $1,551 to $1,650 group got raises because they had representation.

"It is precedent shattering; it is destructive in character; it has demoralized us to a point where we feel our jobs have taken on a character of uselessness," the letter asserted.

"We propose you approve a salary adjustment for us of 5 per cent effective Jan. 1, 1971."

The increased cost to the county under the proposal would be $50,000 this fiscal year.

The managerial group also asks for an improved salary policy to resolve inequities in the future.

A separate and milder letter will be sent to the supervisors from all elected officials expressing concern about the morale of management personnel because of salary inequities. It will ask the supervisors to take steps to keep management personnel from being forced into unions and collective bargain-

Ohio Man Loses More Than Shirt

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI)— William Fred Eggers, 25, a city employe from Cincinnati, lost his shirt—and a little more—Friday when he visited the capital city.

Eggers told police he was robbed at gunpoint by two women who forced him to take off his clothes and get out of his car.

Eggers also lost $48, and several credit cards. His car was recovered a few blocks away.

New Primary School Urged In Petaluma

With 410 new homes to be occupied on the east side of Petaluma by Sept. 1 and another 804 on the drawing boards, Old Adobe School District trustees have been advised to begin planning a fifth elementary school to meet the population explosion.

School Supt. Dean D. Magowan told the trustees Thursday night that the 410 new units, in nine various subdivision, are to be occupied by the start of school in the fall. And he said that the Sun Development Co. will present plans for a 300-unit subdivision at the Petaluma Planning Commission meeting on Aug. 18 at 7:30 p.m.

Magowan said the 300-unit development, known as Sun Terrace Park, will be located at Ely Boulevard and East Washington Street. He said the homes will probably attract families with small children.

The district now operates three elementary schools and has plans for a fourth on St. Francis Drive and a six-room addition to La Tercera School.

Magowan also told the board that Young American Homes Inc. plans to develop 100 acres near Lucchesi Park next spring. He said the acerage could produce as many as 504 additional homes.

The board noted a portion of the developments will fall within the Rural Waugh School district and set a joint meeting for Sept. 3 at 8 p.m. to discuss the added enrollment burden both districts face.

Male, Not Female

In yesterday's issue of the Independent-Journal, a 24-year-old Novato man, Paul Waldemar Brust of 740 Olive Avenue, who is being held on suspicion of auto theft, was erroneously referred to as a female — the result of a typographical error.

Petaluman New Crusade Officer

Lesly H. Meyer, Petaluma Superintendent of Schools, has been named vice chairman of the Petaluma United Crusdae.

George Tomasini was named as a representative to the Sonoma County United Crusade board and John Olmsted was appointed to fill a vacancy on the campaign nominating committee, according to President Ross P. Game.

Selected as public relations co-chairmen were Pete Fisher of radio station KTOB and John Dickson of the Petaluma Argus-Courier.

Shoot-Out Planned In Advance

treated for shock at Marin General and released yesterday, as was the third woman juror, Joyce Whittmer, Mill Valley.

Ruchell Magee, 31, the only surviving member of the desperate gang, is in fair condition at Marin General today. He was wounded in the final shootout.

Jim Kean, Independent-Journal photographer who took pictures as ordered by the gang themselves and their prisoners before the bloodletting yesterday, said the first thing that came to mind was a resembalance to airliner hijackings.

"I was absolutely appalled when I heard all that shooting" a few minutes later, Kean recalled. "I thought they were just going to let them go with their hostages."

The gunmen had told Kean, "You take all the pictures you want. We are the revolutionaries."

But the getaway was blocked, and deadly gunfire followed, although Sheriff Louis Mountanos said he had ordered his men to follow the gang in unmarked cars rather than try to stop them while they held hostages.

The bleached-haired Jackson, authorities learned hours after the killings, was a 17-year-old high school graduate who had rented the yellow getaway van under his own name Thursday in San Francisco.

San Quentin authorities confirmed he had visited the prison earlier this week, to see his brother George Jackson, 28. The elder Jackson is being held in San Quentin for San Francisco trial on deaths in the Soledad brothers' bloodletting earlier this year.

However, the officials said, they had no indication that McClain and George Jackson knew each other. They also said the younger Jackson had no major criminal record. The two convicts were in different cell blocks at San Quentin.

But attaches in Judge Haley's court said Magee, a defense witness for McClain, had been "very heavy" on the race issue, and Warren Wells, identified as a Panther member by his San Quentin guards, had been on the witness stand Thursday.

Both courtroom bailiffs and San Quentin guards had been uneasy about McClain's demands that batches of five or six hard-to-handle convicts be brought to the courtroom daily.

Chronologically, here is what happened, as nearly as the sheriff's office, Dist. Atty. Bruce B. Bales and other authorities can piece it together:

The trial of McClain was nearly halfway into its fifth day. McClain, acting as his own attorney, had put fellow San Quentin inmate Ruchell Magee, 31, on the witness stand.

Judge Haley's bailiff, James Layne, 28, was seated in the back row of the courtroom audience section.

As the trial droned on, Layne saw a young man enter the courtroom and sit down only half a dozen seats from the bailiff. Layne recalled that he had seen the youth — now identified as Jackson — the day before. Jackson had asked Layne whether the McClain case was in progress, and had sought details.

Layne said he nodded when Jackson entered the courtroom Friday shortly after 10:30 a.m., but became alarmed when he noticed Jackson was carrying a satchel, had a bulge under the left side of his jacket, and was keeping his right hand in his pocket.

"I was just getting ready to ask him to come outside (into the hall) with me when he stood up and swung (pointed) a gun at me," Layne said.

Jackson ordered everybody to freeze — to drop — and tossed weapons to McClain and Magee.

A confusing 40 minutes of terror had begun.

Jackson's bag contained a semiautomatic carbine, a strange weapon contrived of a sawed-off shotgun with what looked like dynamite sticks — but actually were railroad fuses, other weapons and several rolls of fine wire, similar to piano wire.

There was also a roll of adhesive tape, which McClain used to tie the shotgun around Haley's neck.

Jackson went into the hall and captured and brought into the courtroom the San Quentin guards who were holding another convict, William Arthur Christmas, 38.

Jackson, Magee and Christmas also tried to free two other San Quentin inmates held in a small room beside the courtroom, but the inmates, Willie Reddics, 33, and Mark Cisneros, 23, refused to join the plot.

Magee and Christmas forced the San Quentin guards to remove shakles and handcuffs, with Magee declaring "I want to be a free man, so help me, God."

A family passing by in the hallway, Mr. and Mrs. Tim Wylie and their 17-month-old son, in a stroller, were captured by Jackson and brought into the courtroom.

"They argued about taking the baby along as a hostage, but one guy (McClain) said no," Wylie recalled. "If they had, I'd probably be dead now. I would have jumped them."

Also captured in the front hall was Earl Cummesky of the sheriff's identification office.

Meanwhile, Jackson, Christmas, and Magee were wiring together the three women jurors, Thomas and court reported Kenneth Combs. The cons were so nervous they didn't tie me up very well; I slipped my hands out of the wire and just lay down on the floor." Combs said.

Practically everyone in the courtroom except the five hostages was forced to remain on the floor throughout, with Jackson volleying curses and death threats.

The captives reported Jackson kept declaring, "I want to kill somebody;; and urged his companions to "tie them up tight," and said, "I want them to know what it's like" to be bound.

McClain harangued the captives, on how he had been done an injustice, wanted justice and "I want my freedom, by God." He also warned the other gunmen to remain calm and yelled at Jackson when he began extricating the apparent dynamite sticks and tossing them to the convicts: "Take it easy, we don't know how old that stuff is."

The gunmen nervously bickered about whom to take as hostages. Bailiff Layne reported McClain said, "Women are too slow; the bailiff is cool; we don't want the baby."

Throughout all the hectic courtroom action, McClain stayed with the judge, holding him at gunpoint.

The other captives said Haley repeatedly urged calm, assured the gunmen the crowd would be cooperative, and agreed to McClain's demand to telephone Sheriff Mountanos.

After Haley warned the sheriff the courtroom had been captured, McClain took over. He warned Mountanos to "keep your dog-pigs away," courtroom witnesses heard.

Mountanos said McClain told him to come to the courtroom, where the gunmen would send someone out to negotiate.

The sheriff, Inspector Harvey Teague and other aides rushed down a staircase near the courtroom — but the gunmne already had herded the hostages into the hall, and made the advancing sheriff's men raise their hands.

McClain marched the judge toward the nearby press room, after having I-J photographer Jim Kean take their pictures in the hallway.

After an abortive attempt to get into the press room — apparently to gain the newsmen's ear for demands he made several times for his own freedom and those of the "Soledad brothers" — McClain and his prisoner rejoined the rest of the gunmen and their hostages in the front hallway.

The newsmen, earlier threatened by a gunman in the hallway and warned by Bailiff Layne — who raced out the courtroom's rear door the second the gunmen left via the front door — had locked their office door.

As Mountanos and other lawmen helplessly watched, the gunmen herded their captives into an elevator and down to the main lobby of the Hall of Justice. It opens onto an archway which also contains the entrance to the sheriff's department.

There, Sheriff's Lt. Tom Lightfoot, bailiff Arthur V. Wiggins — erroneously identified in early reports in the I-J yesterday John Higgins and as a San Quentin guard — and other deputies had armed and stationed themselves.

Lightfoot said Jackson cursed them and ordered them to drop their weapons, declaring they'd kill the judge. He fired three shots into the air to punctuate the order.

Wiggins obeyed orders to drop his shotgun at Jackson's feet, did so, and slowly backed off, hands in air, while the gunman cursed and threatened to kill him. Lightfoot and the others ducked behind a patrol car; Lightfoot used the car's radio to warn other lawmen that the group of nine gunmen and hostages was heading toward the armed band's truck, a yellow rental vehicle parked on the west side of the building.

After loading their hostages, the gunmen drove away, apparently pausing to change drivers, according to eyewitnesses County Clerk George Gnoss, Asst. County Coroner Richard Fontaine and others.

"I ran around toward the east side of the building, when I heard shots," Lightfoot recalled.

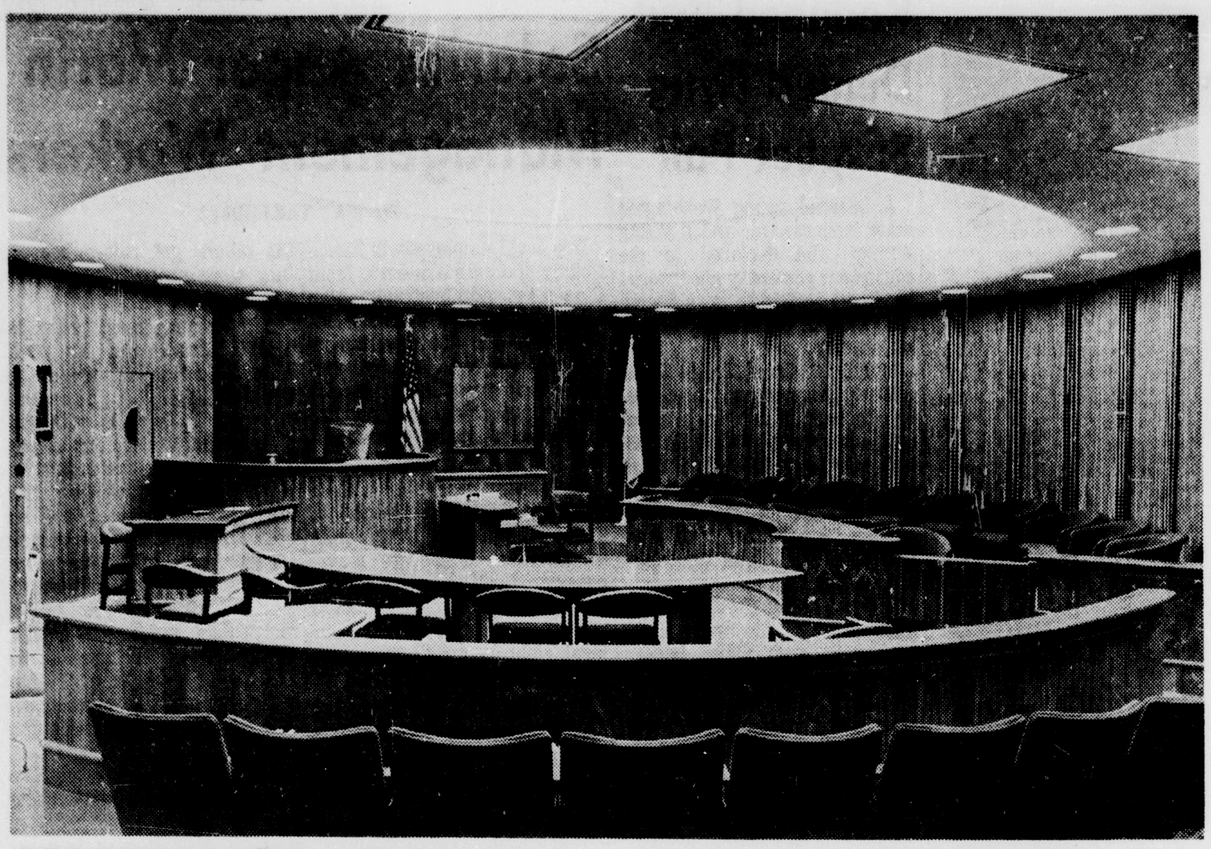
By then, alerted by a broadcast, sheriff's cars, San Quentin cars, California HIghway Patrol vehicles and police cars had ringed the building, blocking exit to the east.

Fontaine said he saw a San Quentin guard race toward the archway, suddenly pause, then aim and fire at the van. There were many shots, and a flash inside the van, Fontaine recalled, which may been the fatal shotgun blast that blew away the lower of Judge Haley's face.

Lawmen raced to the van; the survivors were pulled out, and Dist. Atty. Bales arrived and talked to his wounded assistant. Thomas, Bales said, told him that he "grabbed a gun and shot three of them. I hope I killed them."

Sheriff's deputies and Hamilton Air Force Base demolition experts gingerly extracted sticks of "dynamite" rolling around inside the van and carried in the gunmen's pockets, raced through the roadblocks into an open field — and found the sticks were not dangerous.

Crowds thronged the scene, sheriff's detectives scraped evidence off the roadway, the wounded were cared for and dead were covered and removed, and the Civic Center flags were lowered in tribute to the slain judge.



BEGINNING SCENE — The Marin Superior Courtroom of Judge Harold J. Haley — where yesterday's tragic events began — is quiet and empty today. Yesterday, a seat in the spectators' section (foreground) of the court was occupied by Jonathan Peter Jackson. At the counsels' table immediately in front of the spectators' section sat Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas and the defendant, David McClain. Court clerk Frank Kirby sat at the small table to their left. Above and behind Kirby was Judge Haley. To the right of the judge's stand, Ruchell Magee was testifying from the witness box and the jury was seated in the group of chairs at the far right.

Inmates Described As Discipline Problems

A San Quentin Prison official yesterday described the three inmates involved in a shooting spree at Civic Center as "severe discipline problems."

Parole representative J.R. O'Brien said the men, James David McClain, Ruchell Magee and William Arthur Christmas, "posed a problem to themselves and others by their activities and apparent desires not to conform to any type of control."

Christmas and McClain were killed as they attempted to flee the Civic Center in a van with Superior Court Judge Harold J. Haley and four other hostages.

McClain was being retried before Judge Haley yesterday on a charge of stabbing a San Quentin guard, E. K. Erwin, with a prison-made knife during a fracas in the San Quentin kitchen area. A hung jury ended the first trial in June and on both occasions, McClain acted as his own attorney.

Magee and Christmas were witnesses in McClain's behalf, O'Brien said.

Each man had a long history of trouble with the law. Each had difficulty adjusting to prison life, O'Brien said, and each was given a wide berth by prison personnel and other inmates.

O'Brien described their prison records:

RUCHELL MAGEE, 31, born in Franklinton, La. His first conviction was in March 1956 in Washington Parish, La., for attempted rape.

Paroled in 1962, he moved to California and was arrested again in March 1963 in Los Angeles on suspicion of robbery and kidnapping. Convicted on the count, he was sentenced to life in prison with his first chance for parole in December 1970.

O'Brien said he had 17 violations of prison rules during his stay in San Quentin, most of them minor. These included disobeying orders, conduct which might lead to violence, a poor attitude toward work and violating mailing privileges.

O'Brien called him a "marginal" prisoner, neither a severe problem nor a model inmate. Of the three, he was the best behaved.

WILLIAM ARTHUR CHRISTMAS, 27, was born in Omaha, Neb. His first offense came in 1962, when he was 21. He spent a year in the Alameda County Jail for burglary.

In April 1964 he was convicted of second-degree burglary and sent to San Quentin. While there in March 1966 he was convicted of possessing a weapon and sentenced to three years to life. He had passed his first date of parole eligibility in 1967.

"He was a serious discipline problem," O'Brien said. He was shuffled from one prison to another in an attempt to permit him to start over if he wished.

Transferred to Soledad Prison in 1967, he was sent back to San Quentin in 1968, to Folsom later the same year and finally back to San Quentin.

O'Brien explained that this often is done to allow prisoners to break old images if they wish. An inmate builds a reputation when he is confined to one institution for a long time, and he may find difficulty discarding the image, O'Brien said.

"We give them a chance to start fresh if they want," O'Brien said. "But Christmas proved that this was the type of prisoner that he wanted to be."

JAMES DAVID MC CLAIN, 37, was born in El Paso, Tex. His criminal record began in 1954 with vagrancy, traffic violations, and petty thefts and by 1960 he was committing robberies. He was sent to San Quentin from San Joaquin County in 1962 for robbery with a prior felony conviction.

Paroled in March 1967, he again was imprisoned in December 1968 for a parole violation — possessing a firearm. He drew a six-month-to-15-year term for the conviction.

On March 2, 1970, McClain was involved in the incident for which he was being retried yesterday.

O'Brien said that Erwin, the guard, asked McClain for his identification card, but the inmate allegedly pulled the knife and stabbed Erwin in the chest.

"His problem was the most serious of all these men. His hostility to the staff made him a dangerous man," O'Brien said.

MYSTERY

place inside the van." He added there appeared to be about eight bullet holes in the van, but could not say whether they were fired from inside or outside.

Retana said he was not sure of the number of shots fired or of the number of officers positioned awaiting the yellow van's exit.

"Reports on the number of shots fired range all the way up to 50 and 100," he added.

Retana said the sheriff's office will be aided this weekend in its investigation of the gunfight by a specialist from the state criminal investigation office.

Witnesses, including an Independent-Journal prographer and county elections office personnel, said two gray patrol cars formed a roadblock in the convict's escape route on the east side of the Hall of Justice.

(A spokesman for San Quentin Prison said yesterday prison vehicles are gray.)

"There were two gray cars partially blocking the road," an elections office official said. "However there was enough space on the left of them for another vehicle to get around."

I-J protographer Roger Bockrath, who risked his life to photograph the action, said he also saw the cars, but no space.

"They would have had to wipe out the front of their panel truck to get through that roadblock," Bockrath said.

Still another employee of the elections office, Cedell Bradford, said the first shots sounded muffled, leading them to think they were fired from within the van.

Other witnesses also said the first shots sounded muffled.

Asst. County Coroner Richard Fontaine said he first saw a flash from the inside of the van, coupled with an exploding back window.

Reagan Orders Probe Into Court Tragedy

cussed by judges for a long time," Keating explained, "and no real solution has been found."

Use of armed guards in the courtroom presents severe legal questions, he noted. Constitutional arguments that sight of such weaponry might prejudice jurors have repeatedly been raised.

"Using enough bailiffs to make sure that no person could bring weapons into the courtroom is a possibility, "he conceded. But the courts "never can get enough bailiffs to serve us now," he added.

Peter Allen Smith, presiding judge of Marin Municipal Court, favored "consideration of having as much of the procedure as possible take place at San Quentin instead of here."

He felt that such nonjury matters as arraignment and plead ings could be conducted in the prison. He added that it might even be possible to conduct trials in the prison. He cited the constitutional requirement that a defendant be given public trial as the major hurdle.

Marin County's judges have made a policy of refusing to arm bailiffs and often have ordered prisoners' handcuffs removed whenever a jury was present. Yesterday's defendant was wearing no handcuffs.

Some bailiffs and court attaches late yesterday were less concerned with constitutional protection rights and more vociferous in demanding armed guards in court.

Some said yesterday's violence could be blamed on violence sprouting on campuses and in the streets across the nation. Others called for frisking every would-be spectator at the courtroom door or the use of detection devices similar to those airlines are testing to thwart hijackers.

Governor Reagan, in a statement issued only hours after the tradedy, extended his deepest sympathies to the families of Judge Haley, Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary Thomas and others who were the innocent victims of this vicious attack.

"I want to assure their families that a thorough investigation of this tragedy will be made immediately," the governor said.

In a statement that followed closely on the heels of the governor's, Stutsman, promised a review of security provisions for prison inmates appearing in court.

"It's very difficult to make this a foolproof thing" he said. To make security foolproof, he added, "would go counter to a lot of things we hold dear in this country."

Each judge has sole responsibility for the conduct of his court, Stutsman said. "We have never urged on any judge that he be more lenient or more relaxed with people."

Terming the tragedy "the worst in the history of the department and in the History of the courts," he noted that most judges were reluctant to jeopardize an accused man's civil rights by strong security measures.

The "real danger" comes when prison inmates summon other inmates as character witnesses, he said. "We've gotten by, but not without some incidents — but nothing like this," Stustman said.

"Obviously we're going to have to sit down and think about this," he said.

OBITUARIES

Edward C. Gates, 61, Succumbs

Edward C. Gates, manager of the Tamalpais Theater in San Anselmo for 21 years, died yesterday at a local hospital after suffering an apparent heart attack on Thursday. He was 61.

Gates was born in Omaha, Neb., but moved with his family to Butte City, Glenn County, in 1912. He went to Berkeley in the late 1920s to attend the University of California and had lived in the Bay Area since.

After two years at the university, he transferred to Armstrong Business College, also in Berkeley, where he earned a degree in business administration.

He managed movie theaters for Fox West Coast Theaters in the Oakland area before joining the San Anselmo theater in 1949.

He lived with his wife, Teresa, at 10 Amberwood Lane, San Anselmo.

Gates was an Army veteran of World War II and belonged to the San Anselmo Rotary Club and Chamber of Commerce. He was president of the chamber in 1957-58.

Also surviving is a sister, Dorothy Foster of Pleasanton.

Funeral will be Monday at 2 p.m. at the Chapel of the Hills, San Anselmo, followed by private entombment.

EDNA GARRIGAN

Mass of the Resurrection for Edna M. Garrigan of Larkspur will be Monday at 10 a.m. at St. Patrick's Church in Larkspur.

She died yesterday in a local hospital following a short illness.

Mrs. Garrigan, 81, was born in Sacramento and moved to Marin five years ago.

She was a member of the Ladies Guild of St. Patrick's Church, Larkspur, and a former member of Most Holy Parish in San Francisco.

Surviving her are a daughter, Lois Tiret of Larkspur; two brothers, Elwood F. Bonner of Southern California and William H. Bonner of Pleasanton; three sisters, Alice G. Braun of San Mateo; Nellie B. Billburg of Southern California and Bonita Bossi of San Francisco. Rosary will be recited at 8 p.m. tomorrow at Carew and English Mortuary, San Francisco. Burial will be at Holy Cross Cemetery, Colma.

IRENE GALE

Irene P. Gale, a 67-year Petaluma resident, died yesterday in Hillcrest Hospital after a long illness.

Mrs. Gale, 76, was a member of the First Baptist Church, Petaluma, for 66 years and of the Corona Club.

A native of Mobile, Mo., she came to California as a child and lived in Los Angeles several years before moving to Petaluma.

She is survived by her husband of 54 years, Wallace P. Gale; three sons, Lewis W., Donald P. and Robert L. Gale, all of Petaluma; two brothers, Milton Penn of San Francisco and August Penn of Concord, and four grandchildren.

Funeral will be Monday at 2 p.m. at Parent Funeral Chapel, Petaluma, with burial at Liberty Cemetery.

This portal,
This pathway
Opaquely seen
Thru bright hopes,
Beckons her.

Swathed in a

Age old vows.

May the echos
Of myraid joys
And countless tears
Guide her
On love's way.

BIG SUR

Gazing at the wild wilderness,
The twisted oaks and winding trails,
The warm and rolling hills,
The ever churning sea,
A free and beautiful land
Untouched by man.
Existing in the breath of God.
I can talk to the wind and sea,
For they will always understand.
One doesn't live in this land—
One lives with it,
Every inch alive with nature's beauty.
My great love for this land is expressed
By its great beauty.
God, let this land stay the way it is,
A pure virgin land from man's cruel touch.
If I could describe beauty in two words,
It would be "Big Sur!"

Sheriff's Deputies Leave Rock Concert-Goers Alone

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

About 200,000 young people were jammed into a private park for a weekend rock festival at Goose Lake, Mich., more were coming, and Sheriff Charles Southworth had some instructions for his deputies.

"Leave the young people alone," he said. "I don't care what the hell they do once they're in that private park."

"They," by police estimates, were young people from across the Midwest and Canada who had settled down for three days of rock music (21 bands), drugs, wine and some nude swimming at the lake, eight miles from Jackson, Mich.

The festival's promoters had planned for 60,000 people. By midnight Friday, the gates to the park were closed because "we can't handle any more." Drug vendors sold their wares openly inside the 390-acre park but a 400-man private police force confined itself to keeping the peace and watching the 12-foot-high electrified barbed-wire fence so nobody got in free—tickets cost $15 for three days. There were 50 to 60 arrests outside the park on drug charges.

While music lovers were coming to Goose Lake from Canada, many young Americans were crossing the Ambassador Bridge at Detroit on their way to the Strawberry Fields Festival at Mostport, Ont. The exodus from Canada backed up traffic tow miles. Custom inspectors turned 10 young persons over to Detroit police on drug charges.

More than 40,000 gathered at the Canadian festival and another 20,000 were expected. Little marijuana was in evidence—doctors at a 100-bed hospital said most people were using hashish, LSD and "Speed."

Other rock festival notes:

Indiana — A temporary restraining order was granted Friday against a rock festival on a farm near Mooresville. Promoters said they would appeal to the Indiana Supreme Court.

Pennsylvania—The promoters of a 10-hour festival planned for Philadelphia Sunday canceled the festival. Peace, Inc., the sponsors, said it canceled because of strong local and state opposition which made the festival impossible. The cancellation came minutes after a U.S. Appeals Court approved the concert.

In Washington County, a petition will be filed Tuesday against a festival in West Finley Township in Western Pennsylvania Aug. 28-30. Township authorities said that the 20,000 to 30,000 persons expected to attend would jam the two small roads to the area.

Wisconsin—Gov. Warren P. Knowles met with local authorities to prepare plans for controlling a rock festival near Tomahawk Aug. 15.

Oregon—Several festivals are being planned: one in suburban Clackmas County during which the American Legion will hold a rival festival during its convention Aug. 28-Sept. 2, to siphon off protesters, another in Washington County Aug. 14-16, and another in Salem Sept. 5-7.

Hawaii—Honolulu will sponsor its own rock concerts beginning Sunday at Waikiki Shell with free admission. "I think this is a legitimate form of entertainment for our young people," Mayor Frank Fasi said.

Student Poll Varied On Drug Course

RICHMOND (UPI) —Junior high school students respond to a course on drug abuse not as one, but with varying opinions and reactions.

More than 3,000 seventh graders in seven Richmond junior high schools received a 20-hour drug abuse course designed by Lockheed Information Systems. Results were announced Friday.

Asked whether they learned a little, quite a bit, or a lot from the program, 2,069 answered quite a bit or a lot.

To the question of whether they were surprised, shocked or neither, 674 were surprised, 141 shocked and 1,593 neither. A total of 1,912 said the course helped them understand the problems of drug abuse, 178 said no and 420 said they were not sure.

Mary Jean Sheeran, secondary curriculum coordinator for Richmond schools, said the course was designed for junior high ages, when young people are first likely to form an attitude toward drugs, and added the course avoids the "pearchy" approach.

Lockheed Information Systems, a part of Lockheed Missiles and Space Co. in Sunnyvale, introduced its drug decision course 18 months ago. Almost 35,000 students nationally have taken it.

Trial To Decide Long-Hairs' Right To Unemployment

SAN JOSE (UPI) —A federal judge wants a trial to decide whether the state can cut off unemployment benefits to long-haired men.

U.S. Dist. Judge Peckham refused to order California to resume payments to seven men, but he also refused to dismiss their suit.

The long-hairs were denied jobless benefits on grounds they had refused to enhance their employability by getting haircuts.

The youths contend their right to wear long hair is protected by the U.S. Constitution. They asked for an order restoring their unemployment insurance immediately.

Peckham ruled this week that the suit raised "serious legal questions," but that because of "strong state interests that underlie the unemployment insurance program, it may well be that plaintiff's first amendment right to personal adornment can be restricted."

U.C. Professors Advance After All

BERKELEY (UPI) — Two University of California professors whose promotions were blocked by the Board of Regents last month are apparently going to get their advancements after all.

The university announced Friday that Reginald E. Zelnik, assistant professor of history on the Berkeley campus, has been promoted to associate professor, a position which gives him tenure.

The other faculty member, David B. Kaplan, associate professor of philosophy at UCLA, is also in line for promotion to full professor at the regents meeting next month. He already holds tenure.

Teen-Ager In Car Incident Fatally Shot

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) —A teen-ager was shot to death by police Friday night after a "hot car" allegedly lurched forward and knocked down an officer.

Van Allen Prince, 16, Menlo Park, was dead on arrival at General Hospital after he was hit once in the chest and twice in the leg by gunshots.

The shooting incident occured in the Bayview district, where the suspected stolen car was forced to a stop by a police vehicle.

Officer Gary Frederick of Potrero Station said that as he walked over to talk to the car's occupants, the vehicle bolted forward and knocked him down. Police said he suffered minor injuries.

Several shots followed. Only Prince was hit.

Three other young occupants of the car were held for questioning.

Several observers told reporters the police fired without provocation.

The Romans, while developing the science of bridge building, discovered a natural cement.

Driver Has A Very Bad Day On His Way Down Shoreline

It wasn't a good day at all yesterday for Gary Dean Thompson of San Francisco, involved in two separate auto accidents within an hour on Shoreline Highway in Southern Marin.

Thompson, 34, escaped injury when his vehicle collided with an auto driven by Gregert D. Johnson, 27, of Providence, R.I., at 9 p.m. about three miles south of Olema, the California Highway Patrol reported.

Two passengers in Johnson's vehicle were treated at Marin General Hospital for minor injuries. Yvonne Sasso, 29, of Providence, suffered a foot sprain, and Carol Sasso, 9, also of Providence, suffered a scraped forehead.

The highway patrol said Thompson's vehicle was behind Johnson's as both proceeded south on Shoreline. Johnson stopped to avoid hitting a deer on the road, but Thompson was unable to stop in time, the patrol said.

Thompson was able to drive away from the accident. But an hour later, still on Shoreline, he lost control of his car on a turn and skidded off the road near Stinson Beach. The car overturned.

Thompson was taken to Marin General and treated for a cut chin and lip.

Thomson No Longer Child Center Chief

Former San Rafael High School principal Alfred N. Thomson, now a Terra Linda High School teacher, no longer is president of the Marin Child Development Center in Tiburon.

The I-J erred yesterday in saying he still held the post, when his hospitalization at the University of California Medical Center in San Francisco was reported.

Gas Leak Causes Small Blast At High School Gym

A small explosion caused by leaking natural gas blew the door off an electrical switchbox in the boys' gymnasium at Tamalpais High School yesterday, but caused little damage and no injuries.

Gene Malkemus, gas superintendant at Pacific Gas and Electric Co., said the 7:01 a.m. explosion came when gas leaked into a switchbox and was set off by a spark.

An instructor in the gym at the time called the Mill Valley Fire Department, but there was no fire. A PG&E crew shut off the gas line and a plumber was called in to repair the leak.

Mill Valley's Schools Superintendent Stays

James A. Collins, Mill Valley School District Superintendent, yesterday was offered and "enthusiastically" accepted a new four-year contract at $24,000 a year.

The school board held a special meeting yesterday to offer Collins the new contract.

The contract, retroactive to July 1, cancels the last year of Collins's previous four-year contract at $21,000 per year.

HELEN HELP US!

By HELEN BOTTEL

Students On 'Right' Are Strong In Numbers But Weak In Voice

DEAR HELEN:

It seems that because of the publicity and noise anti-war students make, most adults assume all young people are far-left and howling for an immediate pull-out American troops in Vietnam and elsewhere.

This isn't so.

There are just as many students on the right (or too apathetic to care either way) as there are on the left, but we don't get our voices heard.

The Young Americans for Freedom has a membership of 50,000 conservative young people, which exceeds that of all "new left" groups combined.

But Jerry Rubin alone gets ten times the publicity of our entire group. — STUDENT ON THE RIGHT

DEAR STUDENT:

My youth mail bears out your statement: It is evenly divided between left and right, war and peace-now, flag-burners and flag-wavers. In fact, those who believe we should be in Vietnam slightly outnumber the ones who feel (as I do) that it's a war we should never have fought.

Here's an example:

DEAR HELEN:

My brother went to war in December, 1968. He told me not to worry because he was strong and brave. When the plane pulled out I couldn't help the tears. He never forgot to write.

Then one day he was missing in action. On June 20, we learned that he had died of third degree burns. I cried my eyes out, but I told myself he died for his country.

Now on television you hear these college kids demonstrating. Don't they know that if we don't fight Communism it will take over and we won't be free any more?

If the Government would let me, I would go and help our soldiers. The ones who are yelling are afraid to lose their lives to keep this country free. — L.A.A.

DEAR HELEN:

It isn't cowardice or selfishness or blindness that makes us carry signs which say, "Support our boys in Vietnam — Bring them Home!" My mother is a member of "Another Mother for Peace." Well, I'm another teen-ager for peace.

If it hadn't been for college demonstrations, we probably wouldn't have the timetable for withdrawal. And if it doesn't work out, there will be more riots. This Vietnam mess has just about ruined a country that used to be (so they tell me) united. And for what? So we could keep on saying, "The U.S. never lost a war!" — N.A.M. (but that doesn't stand for 'Nam.)

Letitia Sellers Wed In Ross Rite

Letitia Jane Sellers became the bride of Jeremiah Mason Little Jr. last Saturday at St. John's Episcopal Church in Ross. The ceremony was followed by a reception at the Hamilton Air Force Base Officers Club.

Col. and Mrs. Coleman Sellers of San Rafael are the bride's parents, and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah Mason Little of Johnstown, N.Y.

Joanna Sellers was her sister's maid of honor, and bridesmaids were Brooke Ackley of Honolulu, Christy Coons of Colorado Springs, Colo., and Holly Eckart of Fort Dodge, Iowa.

William Dzierson Jr. of Johnstown was best man, and guests were ushered to their seats by Eric Dzierson of Flagstaff, Ariz., Rod Mitchell of Denver, Colo., and Christopher Nims of Boulder, Colo.

Letitia is a graduate of Terra Linda High School and the University of Colorado. Jeremiah, a graduate of Johnstown High School, attends the University of Colorado.

Following a wedding trip to the Grand Tetons in Wyoming the couple will live in Boulder.

Seams Pop With Wrong Thread

By EUNICE FARMER

DEAR EUNICE,

I just found out that the reason the seams on my polyester garments "popped" was because I wasn't using polyester thread. Why don't stores alert customers to this kind of problem such as mentioning a new type of thread to be used for new materials?

MRS. J.J. O'R.

DEAR MRS. J.J. O'R.,

The reason your seams "popped" might have been partly due to the type of thread you used. However, there could easily have been other reasons, also. I think perhaps the main reason is that you didn't pull your fabric slightly as you stitched your seams. Also, the tension and stitch setting might not have been correct.

By pulling the fabric slightly, you are giving it the elasticity that is equal to elasticity of the knit fabric and the least amount of strain naturally "popped" the thread. Also, the tension must not be too tight and the machine stitch should be set at 10 to 12 stitches per inch.

If polyester thread is available, it can certainly save you a few added hazards, and I would recommend it wholeheartedly. I must also recommend a new needle in your machine to prevent snagging the knit fabric.

MISS ERLA F. Haas, Duncannon, Pa., is this week's Tailor Trix pressing board winner for her sewing hint:

"When sewing rick-rack, lace or any rows of decorative trim to your skirts ,I have found it to work much easier if I open the zipper closing the slip and skirt or dress over the leaf of the sewing machine. It is now possible to continue sewing around without worrying about catching a spot that you did not wish to catch."

DEAR EUNICE,

I'm just itching to get back to the sewing machine and work on my fall and winter wardrobe. But, I honestly don't know what direction to take. Can you help all of us by giving us a suggestion as to what would be a safe garment to make and to be sure of wearing this year? I know that everyone resists changes, but I can't honestly say I'm too enthusiastic about the longer style clothes.

MRS. E.W.

DEAR MRS. E.W.,

I feel that I'm beginning to sound like a broken record, but I'm still flattered that my readers think so much of my opinion and keep asking me for guidance. If you want to start in a new direction and have been wearing your skirts many inches above your knees, I think perhaps it would be a good idea to at least bring your skirts down to the area of the knees for a new look. You may keep the short look by wearing a tunic top with slacks, also a new look.

There is also the long jumper over the blouses. The jumper is usually buttoned down the front and left open to the knee level, giving you a two-dimension look.

Another new look is the sleeveless coat in the longer length, worn over a short dress or skirt. You can almost take your pick, but let's keep making something beautiful and quit worrying about it.

No matter how beautiful a 10-year-old car looks, who would want it today instead of a new one? Change is inevitable, and we must accept it in degrees. I think most of us will begin with a beautiful new coat that will be several inches longer than our present coats to take care of any change in length. We might suddenly decide that a longer length dress isn't too bad after all!

AMA Offers To Publish Pill Facts

CHICAGO (UPI)—The American Medical Association announced today it will circulate a pamphlet describing the effectiveness—and possible hazards—of birth control pills.

The AMA offered to publish and distribute the pamplet after the Food and Drug Administration required manufacturers to include information about the drug in each package of oral contraceptives.

The pamphlet, "What You Should Know About 'The Pill'," has been prepared by the AMA in cooperation with the FDA and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

Distribution will be free to all doctors who prescribe oral contraceptives, regardless of membership in the AMA.

Dr. Max H. Parrott, Portland, Ore., chairman of the AMA Board of Trustees, told a news conference, "The AMA believes the physician is the proper person to inform the patient about a drug he is prescribing, including any risks involved."

The FDA still will require information to be included in each package, but the AMA said, the information does not need to list blood clots each year among women who did and did not take the pill.

"The estimated death rate from abnormal blood clotting in healthy women under 35 not taking the pill is one in 500,000, whereas for the same group taking the pill it is one in 66,000," the AMA pamphlet says. "For healthy women over 35 not taking the pill, the rate is one in 200,000 compared to one in 25,000 for pill users."

"For these reasons it is important that women who have had blood clots in the legs, lungs or brain not use oral contraceptives," the pamphlet says.

It warns patients who suffer from migraine, fibroids of the uterus, heart or kidney disease, asthma, high blood pressure, diabetes or epilepsy that, "all of these conditions may be made worse by the use of oral contraceptives." The pamphlet says the physician may wish to make special tests to determine if the pill is "safe" for a patient with one of the ailments.

The AMA pamphlet also says, "There is no proof at the present time that oral contraceptives can cause cancer in humans. However, the possibility that they may continues to be studied, based on observations that large doses of female sex hormones have produced cancer in some experimental animals."

Ceramicist Is Co-Op School's President

English-born Mrs. Roger Ahlenius of San Rafael is the new president of the Terra Linda Co-operative Nursery School.

Daphne Ahlenius served as the school's vice president from last January to June.

She attended high school and the College of Art in Birmingham, England, and has taken further courses in ceramics at the College of Marin. She is employed with Heath Ceramics in Sausalito as a glaze technician. She says that her interests include reading, cooking and "all aspects of ceramics."

The wife of a carpenter-contractor, she and her husband are parents of William Sven, 4, and Anna Karin, 2, and enjoys participating on a regular basis at the nursery school, as all the mothers of the children attending are required to do.

Other nursery school officers this year are Mmes. Bruce Hixon, vice president; John Thompson, treasurer; Henry Chazankin, orientation chairman; and Bob Strahle, fund-raising chairman.

The reception was given at the San Francisco Athletic Club, and afterward the couple left on a wedding trip to Canada. They will live in Astoria,Ore.

Marilyn was graduated from Marin Catholic High School and Dominican College, where she obtained her teaching credential. She has been a teacher with the Sonoma Valley Unified School District. Mrs. Emilia Bagnani of San Anselmo and Mrs. Marianna Lombardi of San Francisco are her grandmothers.

Thomas is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Lynch of Twin Falls, Idaho, and the brother of Timothy Lynch, Annamarie Lynch and Cathy Lynch, all of Twin Falls.

Now stationed with the Coast Guard at Astoria, he is a graduate of Twin Falls Senior High School and the U.S. Coast Guard Academy.

Attention: animal lovers

Before you make any complaints about our use of animal skins in our latest window display we hasten to explain — they're all fakes! Along with a sensational new sofa, an original Dorothy Liebes designed motto area rug and a fountain that usually works you will find:

Zebra rug that is really an all-wool wilton and almost indestructable. (available in giraffe, tiger and leopard, too)

Dalmation covered chairs (printed velvet, we assure you)

Sofa Pillows mostly Icelandic sheep but could be snakeskin vinyl or velvet printed panthers

Ostrich Leg Lamp this one we're not sure about but since it is silver we don't believe there's a real ostrich inside.

Bit Of Hawaii At Marin Party

By MOLLY MARIN

The flavor of the Islands will be brought to Marin when the Axel Mikkelsens of Marin Country Club entertain at an Hawaiian party for some 50 guests from Marin on Wednesday at their home.

Guests have been invited to wear casual Hawaiian attire — muu-muus and Aloha shirts — for the cocktail and buffet gathering. The Mikkelsens will have fresh pineapples and flowers flown in especially for the evening, and later Hawaiian entertainers will perform for the guests.

AMONG THE large group of travelers to Europe under sponsorship of the Foreign Study League are six from San Rafael. Spending their summer in Spain, Italy, Austria, France and England are Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Lindberg and their teen-age son and daughter, Ane and Helen Lindberg, and Kathleen Menary and Deborah Moore. The travelers will return to Marin Aug. 30.

COCKTAILS WILL be served to guests at the Belvedere home of Mr. and Mrs. L.W. Colby prior to San Francisco Yacht Club's regatta dinner dance tomorrow.

Their guests will be Mr. and Mrs. William Healy and Mr. and Mrs. G.A. Gast. The two sons and their wives of Mr. and Mrs. Gast, visiting at their parents' Belvedere home this month, will attend.

A DINNER hosted Wednesday by Bill Markey of Kentfield at the London Arms restaurant in San Anselmo was both a farewell party and expression of his deep personal gratitude to Ronald and Patricia De May, also of Kentfield. Some 16 guests attended the dinner and more guests came afterward, including a number of Markey's friends from the Ice Follies.

The De Mays, who are both working at Marin General Hospital — she as a registered nurse and he as a central supplies technician — will leave the end of this month for Humboldt County, where he will continue his studies toward the degree in forest management which he started at the College of Marin. She will continue her career part time.

Markey hosted the party in appreciation of the exceptional care he received from Pat De May, both before and after his nearly fatal illness when he was at Center Medical Hospital, where he met her, and at Marin General Hospital following an eye operation.

MR. AND MRS. William Partridge of Sleepy Hollow were honored with a dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Erickson last Friday. Mr. Partridge will retire in September after 45 years with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in San Francisco, where Mr. Ericson is also employed. Mrs. Partridge is active in the Decoration Guild of the Marin Art and Garden Center.

Horner-Franklin Engagement Told

Barbara Franklin's engagement to Sgt. Richard Horner has been announced by her parents, Chief M/Sgt. and Mrs. William T. Franklin of Hamilton Air Force Base.

A graduate of Bellevue High School in Bellevue, Neb., Barbara is attending Golden Gate College in San Francisco and is employed with the Pacific Telephone Co. in Mill Valley.

Richard is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Horner of Cochranton, Pa. Now stationed at Hamilton with the Air Force, he was graduated from Cochranton Area High School and attended Edinboro State College.

A Sept. 19 wedding is planned by the couple.

PATROLMAN COMFORTS WOUNDED JUROR

A California Highway Patrolman comforts juror Marie Graham, shot in the right arm after being abducted from Judge Haley's courtroom. She and two other jurors were taken hostage — together with the judge and Asst. Dist. Atty. Gary W. Thomas — by three armed convicts and an accomplice who made a desperate break for freedom. Judge Haley was killed, as were three of the desperadoes, when the get-away van was blocked and gunfire erupted.

Alameda-Bound Navy Jet Crashes, Crewmen Safe

KREMMLING, Colo. (UPI)— A Navy A3 reconnaissance jet with a four man crew apparently iced up over the central Colorado mountains and crashed 35 miles southwest of here early Friday afternoon.

All four crew members managed to bail out of the twin-engined delta-wing jet.

An Army rescue helicopter from Ft. Carson, Colo., picked up three survivors within several hours of the crash and spotted the fourth survivor at about 10 p.m.

Rescuers had determined that the fourth man was in good enough condition to remain overnight in the rugged mountain country, a spokesman at Fitzsimon General Hospital in Denver said. Four-wheel-drive vehicles would be sent for him this morning, he said.

Only partial identifications were available late Friday. The spokesman said Lt. Bird and Lt. Kaiser were the first to be picked up and spent Friday night at Fitzsimons. Petty Officer Mc Chord was picked up later Friday and flown to an Aspen, Colo., hospital. All were reported in "good" condition.

The fourth crewmember was not identified.

Bird, the pilot, said he would make a statement regarding the crash sometime today when he was assured that the fourth crewmember was safe.

The plane was one of three jets enroute to the Alameda Naval Air Station in California.

RUSSIAN ORTHODOX SAINT

First Canonization In 100 Years

KODIAK, Alaska (UPI)—The Russian Orthodox Church canonizes its first saint in a century this week—a Russian monk who was never a priest but who brought the church to the new world.

Some of the highest-ranking members of the church's American branch are attending the four-day ceremony which concludes tomorrow.

The celebrant is Archbishop Ireney, primate of the Orthodox Church of America, founded 175 years ago by a simple monk named Herman.

Although he refused to be elevated to the rank of priest, the monk was known as "Father Herman" by his peers and fondly referred to as "APA"—beloved grandfather—by his Aleutian congregation.

Despite opposition from civil authorities, Father Herman championed fair treatment for the Alaskan natives long before supporting a minority cause became popular.

He was among eight monks selected for mission work in Alaska, then owned by the Russians, by direct order of Empress Catherine in 1794.

The Christian missionaries, the first to be sent overseas by Russia, traveled an arduous 7,327 miles from St. Petersburg, arriving in Kodiak Sept. 24, 1794.

Conflicts flared almost at once between the newly arrived clergy and Russian traders over the cruel treatment of the natives. When the Kodiak mission protested such treatment, the hostility intensified.

Father Herman withdrew to nearby Spruce Island in about 1810 for relief from the anti-clerical actions of those in the trading company. He called the mist-haunted, exquisitely green island "New Valaamo" after a beloved monastery on Lake Ladoga in Finland.

The monk built Alaska's first orphanage on the island for children of Aleuts killed hunting the sea otter's luxurious pelts for the ruthless Russian traders or who died from disease brought by the outsiders.

He also taught the inhabitants gardening in what has been called "Alaska's first agricultural experimental station," demonstrating the efficacy of the seaweed kelp for fertilizer.

By 1825, only Father Herman remained of the original group. One monk was killed by mistrusting natives, three drowned when a ship went down on a return trip from Siberia, two returned to Russia, and Monk Ioasaf, a special friend of Father Herman's, died at Kodiak in 1823.

The humble monk lived in semi-seclusion on New Valaamo until his death on Dec. 13, 1837 at the age of 80.

Today the Alaskan Russian Orthodox Church membership is composed 99 per cent of natives—Aleuts, Eskimos and Indians. Services in many of the churches are conducted in the old Slavic language.

Baptist Professor To Study At Cambridge

Dr. Fred L. Fisher, professor of New Testament Interpretation at Golden Gate Baptist Seminary at Strawberry, left this week for sabbatical studies at Cambridge University in England.

Accompanied by his wife, Fisher will also attend a membership meeting of the Studiorum Novi Testamenti Societas which will be held Aug. 24-28 at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

He will spend the fall and spring working with Cambridge Professor C. F. D. Moule in the area of research and writing. Two of the writing projects include portions of a one-volume Bible commentary to be published by Broadman Press. His assignment will be to write the segment on the book of Romans, First and Second Corinthians.

He also hopes to write a textbook on New Testament theology and to begin at least one volume of a series on Jesus and his teachings.

Following the studies at Cambridge, Fisher will do study-travel in the Near East to visit the sites of the ancient churches of Asia Minor and the Holy Land.

The Fishers will return to the Strawberry campus in July 1971.

Lutheran Assembly Approves Modified Racial Resolution

EVIAN, Finland (LWF) — A considerably modified resolution on racial discrimination in Lutheran churches was approved in the closing hours of the Fifth Assembly of the Lutheran World Federation.

Clearly a compromise between those who wanted to express the concerns of black Africans and those who feared to offend the white churches of South Africa, the resolution stated two principles:

In the Lutheran Church, members of all races should be willing at all times to receive communion together and the Lutheran churches should oppose the principles and practices of racial discrimination and segregation.

An earlier version of the resolution, presented by the Policy and Reference Committee, had spoken of "apartheid." However, this was changed to "racial discrimination" in the version approved by the assembly.

The second part of the resolution recommended to the new Executive Committee of the LWF that it send a delegation "to churches where the above principles constitute a special problem to urge them to bring their racial practices into conformity with the principles of Christian fellowship as rapidly as possible."

And it was further stated that "in order to encourage the quest for equal justice the two principles shall serve as criteria in providing assistance to churches."

The initial version of the official resolution had specified that the delegation be sent "to Lutheran churches in the Republic of South Africa." Also it had asked that LWF funds be channeled to non-white African churches "to provide the economic and spiritual support they so desperately need in their quest for equal justice."

Several attempts to delete the whole concept of a delegation were beaten down.

LWF president-elect Mikko Juva, who chaired the Policy and Reference Committee, finally declared that proposed amendments were making the resolution "milder and milder." He insisted the resolution gave the Executive Committee the clear responsibility for acting on the principles which all had agreed on.

The resolution was prompted by black members of the assembly who maintained that the assembly by its silence was giving "tacit approval to the unholy conditions which exist among the races of South Africa." It spoke of "human atrocities being committed in the Republic of South Africa reducing non-white peoples to sub-human status." It urged that the LWF constituency be appraised of these facts.

The black members also asked that no assistance be given to the white Lutheran churches in South Africa until they are willing to commune with their black brothers and put forth a program opposing the principles and practices of apartheid.

Of the eleven Lutheran churches in South Africa four are white of which two are LWF members; of the three churches in South-West Africa one is white (all three belong to the LWF).

Even the resolution in its revised form provoked the charge of interference with member churches. One opponent charged the LWF with "assuming the position of a super-church."

However, there was a strong desire on the part of many delegates to take specific actions and not simply pass "pious resolutions." The wide margin by which the implementing action passed indicated that the sending of a delegation was seen as a positive way of helping the churches move.

An Ecumenical School Slated

Plans were announced this week for an ecumenical vacation church school, Aug. 17-27, at the First Presbyterian Church of San Rafael.

Sessions at the church, Fifth Avenue and E Street, will be held daily from 9:30 a.m. to noon.

Registration for the school will close tomorrow.

New Book On Jesus Termed 'Magnificent'

By LOUIS CASSELS UPI Religion Writer

What was Jesus really like? What is the distinctive character of the way of life he commended to men by precept and example?

Thousands of books have been written in answer to those questions. Most are pretty bad. A few are fairly good. A very, very few are magnificent.

In the latter category is a small, inexpensive paperback published recently (by Macmillan). It is entitled, "The Founder of Christianity." The author is Prof. F. H. Dodd of Cambridge University, who directed the translation of the New English Bible, and who is regarded by many as the world's foremost New Testament scholar.

In this little book, Dodd has used his enormous erudition the way it should be used: to make deep things clear and easy to understand.

Lesser scholars have argued for years over which parts of the gospels may be regarded as actual sayings of Jesus and which parts may be interpretations or interpolations by the early Church. Dodd cuts straight through this maze of quibbling to answer the one question of urgent importance to the confused layman who is wondering whether the New Testament presents an authentic picture of a real person and his teachings.

His answer is an unqualified yes.

The gospels, Dodd says, "offer a body of sayings on the whole so consistent, so coherent, and withal so distinctive in manner, style, content, that no reasonable critic should doubt, whatever reservations he may have about individual sayings, that we find reflected here the thought of a single, unique teacher."

The distinctive "style" of Jesus, reflected in his record teachings, is "crisp, pungent, often allusive, even cryptic, laden with irony and paradox," he says. It betrays "a mind whose processes were swift and direct, hitting the nail on the head without waste of words." Jesus's sayings made clear that he had a keen sense of humor, a love of nature, and a poetic imagination.

The narrative portions of the gospels reveal other pronounced personality traits. Jesus's relations with people were invariably characterized by a "sensitive response" to their needs. "he was drawn to those who were sick in mind or body, because they needed help that he could give."

Plans For Tent Crusade Next Month Are Announced

A group of Marin County Christians of different races, denominations, and points of view will conduct meetings in a tent at the Corte Madera Shopping Center Sept. 13 - 27.

Rev. Fred Small, director, and Father Tod Ewald, co-director, said this week they have met with enthusiastic response for this Triple I-C Crusade 70s, which stands for Inter-Denominational Interracial Involved for Christ in the 70's.

As it is being structured, Crusade 70's offers the public an opportunity to participate in these meetings which will allow blacks, whites, the young, the old, the rich and the poor to gather together in a natural, non-political atmosphere in order to achieve better understanding and communication.

The very unlikeliness of a "tent meeting" for the common purpose of worshipping God with a program which involves participation by all denominations, representing all forms of worship is exciting and unique according to them.

Anyone interested in participating in Crusade 70's may get further details by calling Small or Ewald.

Guest Will Fill Pulpit Tomorrow

Jerry Bruton, member of the United Methodist Church in Novato, will be guest speaker at the church's 8:30 and 10:55 a.m. services tomorrow.

His topic will be "Good Medicine," on subject matter taken from one of the late Rev. Peter Marshall's sermons.

Rev. Steven L. Darling, pastor, is on vacation and laymen are filling the pulpit on Sundays during his absence.

Novato Churches Set Bible School

St. Francis Episcopal Church and Grace Lutheran Church of Novato will hold a joint vacation Bible school Aug. 17-28.

Registration will be held opening day at Grace Lutheran. Classes are open for kindergarten through sixth grade children.

Classes for kindergarten, first and second grades will be held at Grace Lutheran while third through sixth graders will meet in Collins Hall at St. Francis.

Teen Dance Tonight

The Rohnert Park Recreation Department will sponsor a dance for teen-agers from 8 to 11 p.m. today at the Rohnert Park Junior High School. Music will be provided by the Bronze Hog.

FIRST SCIENTIFIC ATTEMPT

World Of The Spirit Explored

LONDON (Toronto Telegram News Service) — The first known scientific attempt to make a study of the world of the spirit is being undertaken at Oxford University.

In order to gather as much material as possible, an appeal is being made to men and women all over the world who have undergone any sort of religious experience to write and tell Sir Alister Hardy its precise nature.

Together with his team of workers at the new Religious Experience Unit at Manchester College, Oxford, Sir Alister wants to delve into the faith of man.

"Our main aim is to build up a body of knowledge about religious experience in the present-day world which we hope will demonstrate whether or not it does in fact form, as I believe, an important part of the make-up of man. Something which may perhaps be psychologically as fundamental as is sex, but much less understood," he says.

"I would like to contact all those who have been conscious of and perhaps influenced by, some such power, whether they call it the power of God or not, to write a simple and brief account of these feelings and their effects."

The research unit also intends studying ecstatic or mystical experiences.

Experimental work is being carried out in the field of extra-sensory perception. And when the study is more fully underway, experts in Oriental languages will delve into experiences from some of the religions of the East.

"If this power is as I believe — common to all mankind — then such studies may be a contribution, if only in a small way, towards an ultimate universal faith," says Sir Alister.

Explaining the reasons for establishing the research unit, Professor Hardy said: "Few will deny that in the past religion has been one of the most powerful influences moulding human behavior in the course of history.

"Many people ask if our civilization can survive without it.

"How much may the destructive unrest of modern youth be attributed to a belief that the spiritual side of the universe is an illusion? Or to the belief that scientists have dismissed the spiritual side as being nothing more than a superstition from the past which we should outgrow?"

Sir Alister believes, too, that the unconsciously frustrated desire for spiritual experience is just as important and causes as much unhappiness as does unconsciously-frustrated sex.

"I think it is likely that the religious urge is as much a part of man's natural history as is sex, but whose springs are much less understood," he says.

Because of his beliefs, he has set up his research unit to make a systematic study of religious experience in the modern world.

"Science cannot be concerned with the inner essence of religion, just as it cannot deal with the nature of art or the poetry of human love.

"However, we can make a systematic and scientific study of the records of man's religious experience and by so doing, after a long study, help towards a better understanding of it," he says.

The research unit intends to sift carefully through the accounts of religious experience sent in, and then to probe further into the more interesting and revealing cases.

The distilled results will be translated into a form of questionnaire. After that a sample of population the different parts of Britain, and possibly other Western countries, will be asked whether they have undergone similar experiences or feelings.

Sir Alister, who is emeritus professor of zoology at Oxford and formerly a lecturer on science, natural history and religion at Aberdeen University, hopes that the eventual findings of his research unit might lead to a more experimental approach to religion. He also hopes that people who are sceptical might be persuaded to approach the power of religion in order to find a better way of life for themselves.

Says the professor: "I believe they would find that it gave results.

"Religion could become animated by a more vital and dynamic faith than one which rests mainly upon the acceptance of dogmas from the past.

"It would truly become an experimental faith.

"Even if the cracking of civilization through the suppression of the religious forces which have built it up and sustained it appears to be only a remote possibility, is it not worth finding out a little more about them before it may be too late?

"We hope to persuade the intellectual world that experiences of some power beyond the self, which many people have felt, appear to form some fundamental part of man's nature which may indeed help him in his actions."

Grid Openers: Rookies On Spot, Stars On Sidelines

By BILL MADDEN
UPI Sports Writer

College football's "Bright Young Seniors of 1969" will face the first tests of their professional careers with their new teams today as the National Football League begins 1970 combat with 10 preseason games.

From this point on the Saturday heroes of the collegiate gridiron will no longer be judged by lost year's press clippings. The Steve Owenses, Mike Phippses and Mike McCoys will be asked to live up to their advance billing.

Meanwhile as the rookies advance front and center, a few of their predecessors, who passed the college to pro test with flying colors, are grabbing the headlines by their absence.

Joe Namath of the New York Jets, Joe Kapp of the Minnesota Vikings, and Lance Alworth of the San Diego Chargers—all of whom reached the pinnacle of success as pros after equally brilliant college careers—have served notice to their employers that they will not be there for the opening bell.

Namath told the New York Jets that he has problems and can't get involved over football at the moment. Kapp found his employer somewhat less than sympathetic to his salary demands and elected to leave what has been offered him rather than take it. Alworth claims that his bosses—the San Diego Chargers—reneged on a loan agreement and so he, too, is hanging it up. Whether or not the three reconsider their decisions remains to be seen. In the meantime, they're doing an excellent job in creating advance notice for the forthcoming season.

While Namath remains in New York to mull his problems, the Jets will meet the Buffalo Bills at Birmingham, Ala., in a game that was originally billed as somewhat of a homecoming for the celebrated "Broadway Joe," who played at the University of Alabama. With Namath not present, the Jets will get a good look at second-year man Al Woodall and newcomer Harry Theofilidies in addition to veteran Babe Parilli.

Kapp's absence will give the Vikings a chance to test Bill Cappleman, one of the "Bright Young Men" who set a host of passing records at Florida State the past two seasons. The Vikings, who will take on the New Orleans Saints in the annual Hall of Fame game at Canton, Ohio, will also be keeping a close eye on their top draft choice, defensive tackle John Ward of Oklahoma State.

With Alworth out of the starting lineup, the Chargers will go with Walker Gillette, the club's number one draft choice from Richmond University, against Dallas. The Cowboys will be without the services of their All-Pro defensive end George Andrie, who joined the fast-growing list of retired pros Friday when he too failed to see eye to eye over his value to his employers.

In another game on the West Coast, the Cleveland Browns will meet the Los Angeles Rams. The Browns will have their first opportunity to find out if Purdue's All-American quarterback Mike Phipps was worth sacrificing All-Pro receiver Paul Warfield. The Rams will get a look at one of 1968's class of young stars in Jim Seymour, who spent last season in the military service after a brilliant career as a wide receiver at Notre Dame. Tennessee linebacker Jack Reynolds will also come under the close scrutiny of Rams' head coach George Allen.

Cincinnati's new Riverfront Stadium will get its first taste of pro football when interim coach Bill Austin brings the Washington Redskins to town to meet the Cincinnati Bengals. Austin, who is filling in for the ailing Vince Lombardi, will pay close attention to defensive end Bill Brundage from Colorado.

The New York Giants and the Green Bay Packers continue their annual pre-season affair at newly expanded Lambeau Field. The Giants have a pair of new linebackers in Wayne Meylan, acquired from Cleveland, and Jim Files, their No. 1 draft choice from Oklahoma. The Packers will get their first look at Notre Dame's Mike McCoy, the huge defensive tackle they hope will be able to

JIM MURRAY

An Eerie Thing About Willie Mays

The trouble with Willie Mays is that, 6 out of every 10 times at bat, he's mortal. A total of 6,800 times in his career, he's had to go back to the bench with only a pop-up, ground-out or strikeout to show for his efforts. Heck, he's only scored 1,892 runs. Some nights, he goes only 1-for-4.

He's only stolen 309 bases. Some years, he gets caught as many as four times.

You take, like, Babe Ruth is almost 100 home runs ahead of him. Some pitchers have no trouble holding him to a single. Over 1,200 times he's had to settle for a base-on-balls. Three guys are ahead of him in total bases, and only two of them are dead.

I mention this because, otherwise, the temptation might be to think Willie Mays was really Peter Pan. Or Sir Lancelot. Or that the Giants found him under the bullrushes one day. You would be tempted to follow him at night to see if he disappeared when he took the glass cleats off. Or flies over tall buildings with a cape.

Should Be 39 Years Old By Now

The eerie thing about Willie Mays is that he should be 39 years old by now. I mean, if you compute time by human reckoning. He should be reading with glasses. His signature should begin to have wavy lines. You might even expect him to misjudge a fly ball now and then, throw to a wrong base. His teeth should hurt, his hair should gray. That body should have some fat on it. The eyes should have pouches under them. You'd think his feet would be killing him.

An angel of the Lord should appear at the clubhouse some night and say, "Okay, Willie, the Boss says that's enough. You're to come with me."

Certain creatures don't age. Or, if they do, they do slowly. Giant Silurian sea turtles and Giant center fielders.

Willie Mays of 1970 went to bat in Dodger Stadium the other night and, from the front row of boxes, it could have been Willie Mays of 1951. The same trim, tight-suited body that looks as if it is running when it is just standing still, the same high-pitched squeaky little boy's voice.

A Dart Through The Mona Lisa

The pitch hit him in the small of the back, and the pitcher, Don Sutton, looked on in horror as if he had just thrown a dart through the Mona Lisa or cracked a statue of St. Francis with a rock.

Pitchers are supposed to stand there with a sneer when they plunk a batter. The more he writhes, the more unconcerned they're supposed to look. Don Sutton ran up like a Red Cross nurse. The crowd — a Dodger crowd, mind you — booed him. Some thought they should arrest him.

When Willie Mays first came to San Francisco as the Giants got moved there, you could see it was an agnostic town by the way it resented him. (The author, Charlie Einstein, once wondered, "what kind of town is it that cheers Khrushchev and boos Willie Mays?") It, San Francisco, seemed to think he should catch fly balls out in the bay, hit home runs over into the Farallones, and stop storms at sea with a wave of his hand. He got 5,613 total bases in 9,850 times at bat which means, with walks, that he gets a base seven out of every nine times at bat. In the outfield, veteran baseball reporters took to automatically marking an "8" in the score book on EVERYTHING hit to center field or 100 feet in either direction therefrom.

20-Year-Old Kid From Alabama

In the interests of psychic phenomena rather than baseball, I went down to see Willie Howard Mays Jr. in the locker room the other night. I thought I might catch him putting on a wig, touching up the eyes. Maybe there would be a corset. Lampblack for the sideburns.

There was only this 20-year-old kid from Alabama. Running around, snapping towels, laughing. Made you wonder if you were doing the right thing giving them the vote. "Uh, how's the eyesight?" I asked lamely.

"Fine, fine," squeaked Willie. "I can pick up the ball just fine." (He hit a breaking ball 10 rows up in the bleachers in the WRONG field a half hour later.)

"Is the game fun?" I ask. (EVERYBODY asks him that.) "So far," said Willie joyously. Since "so far" is the first 20 years, I could see I was dealing with a spirit not a man.

So I know that when Willie is through, he'll just disappear and never be heard from again. And he won't go to the Hall of Fame, he'll ascend into it from a rock in Golden Gate park.

Little Leaguer's Masterpiece

Jeff Knotts, his fastball overpowering and his control precise, humbled Sacramento's district champion Washington of Broderick on two hits last night to give the San Rafael American League All-Stars a 2-0 victory and a berth in today's finals of the Northern California Section II Little League baseball tournament at Rancho School in Novato.

Knotts, who scored the winning run in the first inning on a wild pitch, struckout 13 batters and walked one as he fashioned his second tournament shutout in less than a week. Last Saturday he blanked Marinwood in the District Three finale, 14-0.

UNEARNED RUNS

In gaining a chance to play Concord today at 3 p.m., the Americans lacked the awesome power they used in storming to the Marin County title. That no doubt was because the pitcher they faced last night, Richard Turney, was a good deal better than anyone else they've faced. He gave up only four hits, and both runs off him were unearned.

But if Turney was magnificent in defeat, Knotts was unbelievable in victory. For three innings he pitched perfect ball, striking out the first five men he faced and eight of the first nine. He allowed only one man to reach second base, and only one ball, Ed Gueret's single in the fourth, to be hit to the outfield. The other hit off him was by Ryan DuBois in the fifth.

CASH IN

Opportunity knocked twice for San Rafael in the form of Washington errors in the first and sixth, and the Americans cashed in both times. Knotts, who later doubled but was picked off second, laced a single to left with two out in the first that got by leftfielder Steve Cabrerra for a two base error. The tall hurler dashed home moments later on a wild pitch for what stood up as the winning run.

In the last inning Washington, which defeated Oak Park Wednesday night for the right to come here, hammered its own coffin shut with two more costly misques. After San Rafael rightfielder Dan Helms roped a single to left with two out, Knotts hit what appeared to be an easy ground ball to second base. Gueret bobbled it, however, and then threw it away at third allowing Helms to score.

Earlier that inning Gueret had made a spectacular double play.

Another overflow crowd was expected at Rancho for today's Section title match. Santa Rosa, which lost to Concord Thursday night, 9-4, was to play Washington in the consolation game at 1 p.m.

Bouton Says He Omitted Sexy Parts From Book

By DONALD B. THACKREY

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Jim Bouton, author of the fastest-selling—and the sexiest—sports book of all time, says there were probably "sighs of relief" when major league players read "Ball Four."

"When they read the excerpts they probably thought back and said to themselves 'I wonder if he used that incident?' But I don't have any named guys getting in the sack with a chick. No one is going to have to get a divorce over this book. When they read the book there were probably sighs of relief.

"The sportswriters were harsh on the book, probably because they had to explain to their wives. Can't you hear the wife saying, 'I didn't know the stewardesses stayed in the same hotels as the ball players. Why didn't you tell me that?' "

Bouton's book, published by World Publishing Co. of Cleveland, has sold more than 150,000 copies, is on the best seller lists and is still selling fast. Few sports books in the past have sold more than 200,000 copies during their entire history.

Bouton calls "Ball Four" a "humorous account of baseball."

"I think it's too funny to get mad about," he said.

The knuckleball pitcher, recently sent down from the Houston Astros to the Oklahoma City 89ers because he had become ineffective, said he first thought about writing a book when he was 19 years old and was away from home for the first time playing professional baseball. He said he was struck by the gap between what he had been told about a ball player's life and the actuality.

"I thought I might write it when I got to be a big star," he said, "But I can't wait any longer."

Bouton explained one reaction to the book on his 1969 season with Houston, which he wrote in conjunction with editor Leonard Schecter.

"I overheard my seven-year-old son, Mike, telling a friend, 'My daddy wrote a book and we may have to move because of it.' That's when I decided I had to get the kids together and tell them about the book."

Other Bouton comments at a news conference Friday in San Francisco before the pitcher-author flew to Evansville, Ind. ("Would you believe Evansville?"), where he will pitch for the 89ers, probably Saturday.

On high salaries for professional athletes:

"We are just saying if all this money is being made, we should make it. We don't need the owners. There is only one guy who can field at third base like Brooks Robinson. There are 100,000 like any owner."

On the baseball books of former St. Louis and Cincinnati pitcher Jim Brosnan:

"Terrific. I enjoyed them. They opened my eyes. That's one reason you will find so much conversation in my book. That's what I liked about Brosnan's—he had lots of conversation."

About baseball writers being banned from the Houston bus for a time:

"We were not doing well and it had to be the writers because it couldn't be us. Incidentally, we played .500 ball while the writers were banned."

About former New York Yankee star Mickey Mantle:

"The book is 400 pages long and there is a page and a half on Mantle. I had played with him for some years, he is a superstar and didn't feel I could ignore him."

About the minor leagues:

"The majors have a lot of rules about not signing autographs during games and other things. In the minors the park is like a county fair. You have a much warmer relationship with the fans. In some of these new parks, the fans are so high and so far away that the game is just a rumor."

Sharon To Defend National Tennis Title Next Week

Sharon Walsh of San Rafael returns to Philadelphia next week to defend the U.S. Lawn Tennis Association national junior championship she won there last year.

Since then the 18-year-old, 1970 graduate of San Rafael High School has increased her dominance of junior tennis to cover the world. She won the prestigous All-England tennis tournament's junior division at Wimbledon last month.

Sharon will be a hands-down favorite to claim the crown again. The girl she beat in the finals last year, her long-time friend Gail Hansen of Palo Alto, is too old to compete this time.

ASTROS SNAP S.F. STREAK

Giant 'Kiddie Brigade' Is Spanked

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Just when the San Francisco Giants had their offensive rolling in nigh gear the Kiddie Brigade got out-flanked.

It happened Friday night at Candlestick Park as the Houston Astros shelled Ron Bryant, Don Carrithers, Rich Robertson and Mike Davison for 14 hits enroute to an 11-2 rout that snapped the Giants' win streak at four.

Manager Charlie Fox, who has seen a lot of baseball adversity in his time, took the defeat as hard as any.

"The kids disappointed me," said the Giants skipper. "I really thought we had something going and now we have to start all over again."

Larry Dierker, a 20-game winner last year who has been struggling this year to keep his head above water, stopped the Giants on six hits, three by Bobby Bonds and two by Kenny Henderson, in Friday night's game. Dierker, who evened his record at 10-10, struck out five Giants and walked four.

The victory was only the second in the last 14 starts for Dierker, who can't explain what has happened to him this year.

"I'm pitching the same as I did last year and yet I'm not getting the same results," said Dierker. "I simply can't explain it and neither can anyone else on our club. All I can do is go out there and keep on trying."

Doug Rader, who generally murders the Giants, got Dierker off to a running start by drilling a three-run homer in the first. The blow came off Bryant, who got only one man out in the inning and suffered his fifth loss in eight decisions.

Three of the Houston hits were off Bryant. Carrithers gave up four in 3-2-3 innings. Robertson was touched for three in two frames and Davison for four in three innings. All four pitchers have earned run averages well over 5.00, which is not winning ball.

3,000-Mile Trip Proves Profitable For Golfer

AKRON, Ohio (UPI)—Tom Shaw's 3,000-mile trip for a golf lesson is paying big dividends.

The ever-smiling Shaw failed to make the cut in last weekend's Westchester Classic, so he flew to his hometown, Milwaukee, Ore., to find out what was wrong with his game.

Shaw fired a four-under-par 66 Friday to grab a share of the halfway lead in the American Golf Classic with George Archer, both at four-under 136 at the Firestone Country Club.

"I was hitting it short and crooked," Shaw said, "so I went to Howard Bonar to find out what was wrong."

Bonar is the club pro at the Waverly Country Club at Milwaukee, a suburb of Portland.

MORE FUN

"This is a lot more fun playing like this," Shaw said. "You know I haven't seen you guys (newsmen) for a while."

Shaw's last tour victories were the 1969 Doral and Avco tournaments.

"Those were the only times I was in the top ten last year," Shaw said.

"I can't explain that. Maybe I have to get real good before I get consistent," he said laughingly.

Shaw ripped the 7,180-yard par 70 Firestone Country Club course for seven birdies and three bogeys.

Archer, winless on the tour since his 1969 Masters victory, shot a consistent 69 Friday to go with his first round 67.

"I was a little shaky coming in," Archer said. "I had to save several pars with several good putts.

MORE ROLL

"I've never played well here, except in the fall during the TV matches when the fairways are hard and you get more roll," he said. "I'm not going to be putting for many birdies when I have to hit a wood or a long iron into the green.

"Right now, I think it's playing as short as I've seen, just like it was fall," Archer said.

The day's best round was turned in by Frank Beard who had a five-under 65 to come within one shot of the course record. Beard's round gave him a 138 total and a fourth place tie with Tommy Aaron who had his second straight 69.

All alone in third place was Westchester Classic Champion Bruce Crampton at 137. He had a two-under par 68 Friday to go with an opening round 69.

Julius Boros, Tommy Jacobs and defending champion Ray Floyd were grouped in the next spot at 139.

Floyd, who shot an even par 70 Thursday, was three-under-par coming into the 17th hole Friday, but three-putted both 17 and 18 to finish with a 69.

THREE-PUTTS

"That's six three-putts I've had in 36 holes," Floyd said. "I'm not very pleased."

Both Jack Nicklaus and Gary Player made comebacks Friday, Nicklaus getting a 67 and Players a 68, to give both of them an even par 140. Others in at 140 were Dave Stockton, Paul Harney, John Miller, Kel Nagel and John Schroeder.

At 141 were Dale Douglass, Lou Graham, Larry Hinson, Phil Rodgers and Tom Weiskopf.

A total of 73 golfers, who made the cut of 148, in the $150,000 tournament, will tee off in today's third round. First place is worth $30,000 with $17,100 for second and $10,650 for third.

Good Omen For Pittsburgh, Utility Man Wrecks Mets

By VITO STELLINO
UPI Sports Writer

The Pittsburgh Pirates hope it's a good omen when they get a homer in a crucial series from a utility infielder who never hits homers.

Last year when the New York Mets won the National League pennant, Al Weis hit only two homers during the regular season—but they came on consecutive days in July and helped beat the Chicago Cubs. He then hit a third homer in the fifth and final game of the World Series against Baltimore.

The Pirates hope that their counterpart to Weis this year is a little guy named Fred Patek. In the lineup only because Gene Alley is injured, Patek hit a three-run homer to cap a five-run sixth inning Friday night and the Pirates went on to beat the Mets 6-1 in the first game of a four-game series.

GUARANTEED LEAD

The victory moved the Pirates 3½ games ahead of the Mets in the East Division and it guaranteed that the Pirates will still be in first place at the end of the Met series, regardless of how the other three games come out.

Patek is hitting .477 in his last 18 games since Alley has been sidelined with a sore heel and a weak bat but he doesn't even want to hit anymore homers.

"That's my first homer this year and I hope it's my last. They're too much trouble. I'd rather just hit line drives. I don't get paid for those homers. When I hit one, then I start thinking about them and I don't want to do that," he said.

Willie Stargell, who does get paid for hitting homers, started the Pirate sixth inning rally with a homer that snapped a 1-1 tie. Bob Robertson and Manny Sanguillen then hit one-out singles and after Bill Mazeroski popped up for the second out, winning pitcher Bob Moose doubled in a run. Ron Taylor then replaced Jim McAndrew and Patek, the smallest player in the majors at 5-foot-4 inches, greeted him with his three-run shot.

HITLESS STRING

Moose, who threw a no-hitter against the Mets last September and took a string of 11 hitless innings against the Mets into the game, ran the streak to 64 innings and wound up with a four-hitter.

It was the fifth straight complete game by the Pirate pitching staff—from Bob Veale, Luke Walker, Dock Ellis, Bruce Dal Canton and Moose. This has been a major factor in the Pirate surge since their pitching has been a question mark.

CUBS FALL

In other games, Philadelphia beat Chicago 4-1, St. Louis nipped Montreal 2-1, Cincinnati edged Los Angeles 4-2, Houston routed San Francisco 11-2 and Atlanta beat San Diego 8-2 but lost the second game 6-1.

Chicago fell 5½ games behind Pittsburgh by losing to the Phils. Tony Taylor singled home two runs to snap a 1-1 tie and start a three-run eighth inning for the Phils. Grant Jackson won his third game with relief help from Dick Selma. Ferguson Jenkins, 13-13, took the loss.

The Cincinnati Reds extended their lead to 13 games over the Dodgers in the West with the come-from-behind triumph over the Dodgers. Trailing 2-1, the Reds took the lead when Lee May doubled in two runs in the eighth with the bases loaded. Tommy Helms' sacrifice fly produced an insurance run.

fill at least one of the spots on the defensive front four which has been weakened by the retirements of Willie Davis and Henry Jordan.

The Detroit Lions, who will host the world champion Kansas City Chiefs, are likely to have a noted absentee. Veteran defensive tackle Alex Karras didn't report to camp until Friday because of a contract hassle. The Lions have Heisman Trophy winner Steve Owens to concentrate on as backfield aid for the oft-injured Mel Farr and Nick Eddy.

The Miami Dolphins will get their first look at quarterback Bob Griese since his knee injury sidelined him midway through the 1969 season, but Griese won't have Paul Warfield to throw to. The Dolphins, who engage the Pittsburgh Steelers at Jacksonville, Fla., have been unsuccessful in satisfying Warfield's salary demands after acquiring the speedy receiver from Cleveland for their number one draft pick. The Steelers, meanwhile, will unveil another quarterback in the person of Terry Bradshaw—everybody's "can't miss" in the class of '69.

Don McCafferty will make his debut as head coach of the Baltimore Colts as his charges invade the Oakland Raiders. No new faces grabbing the fans eyes here thought—it's still Johnny Unitas, the Colts' legendary quarterback, who draws the attention.

The Houston Oilers will get the first returns on the trade that exchanged quarterbacks with St. Louis. Charlie Johnson, the new man at the Oilers' helm, will test the revamped Chicago Bears defense. Biggest additions to the Bears are linebacker Lee Roy Caffey and defensive end Bill Staley.

Softballers Get Good, Bad News

Both good and bad news was received yesterday by the Sohner Tree Service softball team, of San Anselmo, winner of the Tri-County District Tournament this week for the third time in the last six years.

On the bright side, tournament officials announced that the Marin club had swept all three individual awards and had placed six men on the all-tournament team.

Jess Munyon won the award for most valuabe pitcher, Ron McCamish was named the most valuable fielder and Ron Blum was picked as the most valuable hitter.

Ed Schulze (lb), Doug Wilson (cf), Art Donati (rf), Munyon (p), McCamish (2b) and Blum (ss) were named to the all-tournament squad.

Ron Baldwin (c) and Ray Allena (3b) from Petaluma's Greyview Farms also made the club.

On the debit side, it was learned that Sohner might have to enter the State Tournament in Napa next week without the services of Munyon and catcher John Brookman.

Munyon damaged the thumb on his pitching hand and Brookman suffered some badly bruised ribs when the Sohner and Greyview teams exchanged blows in a wild melee during Wednesday's title game.

Sohner officials took advantage of the American Softball Association rule permitting the addition of two players before the state tourney by adding pitchers Morey Swarm and Walt Tyler to the roster.

Swarm has pitched for Sohner in past years. Tyler hurls for Guanella Floors of Santa Rosa.

Final tournament standings:

1. Sohner Tree Service, San Anselmo
2. Greyview Farms, Petaluma
3. Pacific View, Sonoma
4. Young American Homes, Santa Rosa
5. Guanella Floors, Santa Rosa
6. Mertle Chevron, Santa Rosa
7. Santa Rosa Merchants, Santa Rosa
8. Leo Spa's, Petaluma
9. Carriage Motors, Healdsburg
10. Ponderosa Lodge, Ukiah

Ken Stabler In Limelight As Raiders Host Baltimore

OAKLAND (UPI) —Southpaw quarterback Ken Stabler, entering his third season with Oakland, makes only his second game appearance tonight when the Raiders meet Baltimore in a pre-season contest at 8 o'clock.

Stabler, an All-America from Alabama University, was injured throughout his rookie season of 1968. He fired a pair of touchdown passes in a rookie game against Dallas last season, then suddenly walked out of camp to attend to "personal matters."

Now he's back to try and earn the reserve quarterback job behind Daryle Lamonica. Stabler will try out the role before a sellout crowd of nearly 53,000 at the Oakland Coliseum as Lamonica is expected to play all or most of the first half.

BEST RECORD

Most Oakland veterans will go to the bench early. The Raiders traditionally use exhibition games as opportunities for rookies and backup players to show their worth. During the regular season, Oakland has had the best record in pro football over the last three years.

While the Raiders take a close look at such players as rookie running back Ted Koy, young tight ends Lloyd Edwards and Ray Chester, linebacker Gerald Irons and defensive lineman Art Thoms, Baltimore will be trying to score a victory in addition to evaluating its younger talent.

The Colts have lost only two pre-season games over the last five years. But after winning all six last year, they slipped to 8-5-1 for their worst record since 1963.

SHARE BLAME

Problems both on offense and defense shared the blame. Neither John Unitas nor Earl Morrall were as sharp in 1969 as they were in the past, and disappointments on defense required a few shakeups halfway through the season.

Unitas, trying to reclaim quarterback supremacy at age 37, will start tonight for Baltimore. Morrall and youngsters Jim Ward and Jeff Beaver also will see action.

Unitas threw eight more interceptions than touchdowns last year. Morrall did not complete even 50 per cent of his attempts. So McCafferty, naturally, is looking for improvement.

The Colts place some hope for the future on No. 1 draft choice Norm Bulaich, a running back from Texas Christian who will be counted on eventually to take over for aging Tom Matte and Jerry Hill.

On defense, cornerbacks Charlie Stukes and Tom Maxwell are going into only their second season as starters. They'll be tested by Oakland's outstanding receiving tandem of Warren Wells and Fred Biletnikoff who combined for 26 touchdowns last year.

TWINS PREVAIL

A's Come Up With An Artistic Loss

MINNEAPOLIS-ST. PAUL (UPI)—There must be an easier way to lose a baseball game.

The Oakland A's did it artistically Friday night while being edged by the Minnesota Twins 2-1 in 11 innings.

Outfielder Jim Holt won it with a homer leading off the 11th. His blast provided an almost comic effect, since the A's had gone to great and seemingly impossible lengths one inning earlier to prevent disaster.

With the bases loaded and none out in the 10th, retiever Marcel Lachemann came to the mound. In that situation, even a .180 hitter with a bat in his hand must be regarded as a slugger of enormous proportions.

MIGHTY HARMON

An extra layer of sweat undoubtedly crept through Lachemann's body as he watched Minnesota's pinchhitter stride from the dugout. It was Harmon Killebrew, benched for poor hitting of late; but still boasting 33 home runs and 89 runs driven in.

Most of the 20,000-plus Minnesota fans rose to their feet to savor the impending slaughter. Lachemann spoiled the script.

He got Killebrew, a tremendous clutch hitter, to ground into a doubleplay. Then he retired Gick Renick for the final out of the inning. What Marcel forgot the next inning was how to get a man out when the bases are empty.

SECOND STRAIGHT

The defeat, the A's second straight, plunged them nine games behind Minnesota in the American League West. With four games left in three days, Oakland needs a sweep to make any appreciable cut into the Twins' lead.

Catfish Hunter pitched admirably for seven innings Friday night, only to go unrewarded by his teammates. The A's managed only five hits off winner Jim Perry after collecting just three basehits the night before.

Campy Campaneris slugged the first pitch off Perry into the seats for Oakland's only run. It was the little shortstop's 16th homer of the season. Rich Reese tied it up in the second inning with his eighth round-tripper of the year.

49er Hardy Hospitalized

By U.P. INTERNATIONAL

SANTA BARBARA — Kevin Hardy, whose two previous years in pro ball have been marked by injuries, was shaken up Friday in a collision with Willie Peake during a San Francisco 49er contact drill.

Hardy was knocked unconscious by the collision and was taken to a hospital for overnight observation. Peake walked away from it all with a headache.

The Forty Niners will hold a workout Saturday morning and a game type scrimmage at night. Everyone will participate in the scrimmage except Hardy, linebacker Dave Wilcox and tight end Bob Windsor. The latter two have sore backs.

CANTON, Ohio — Hugh McElhenny (San Francisco 49ers), Jack Christiansen (Detroit Lions and later coach of the 49ers), Pete Phios (Philadelphia Eagles) and Tom Fears (Los Angeles Rams) were inducted into the National Football League Hall of Fame today, bringing to 63 the number inducted into the shrine.

Baseball

SAN FRANCISCO — The world champion New York Mets are providing the main impetus for an overall rise in National League attendance.

League president Chub Feeney said Friday that attendance through July 31 was up by 1,250,194 over a comparable period of last season.

The Mets have shown the most substantial gain, with an increase of 439,009. Cincinnati, running away with the National League West pennant, shows an improvement of nearly 400,000.

Horse Racing

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The holder of a $10 ticket on the daily double combination of 7-6 at Scioto Downs harness race track Friday collected $5,237 as the track recorded its highest daily double combination payoff this year and the third highest in the track's history.

Today is Saturday, Aug 8, the 220th day of 1970 with 145 to follow.

The moon is between its new phase and first quarter. The morning stars are Mars and Saturn. The evening stars are Mercury, Venus and Jupiter.

On this date in history:

In 1940 the German Luftwaffe began s series of daylight raids on the British Isles that continued until Oct. 31.

In 1945 President Truman signed the ratification of the U.N. charter. Also in 1945 Russia declared war on Japan: seven days before Japan surrendered.

In 1953 the United States signed a mutual pact with the Republic of Korea.

In 1968 Richard Nixon won the Republican nomination for president.

A thought for the day: German novelist Thomas Mann said, "Time cools, time clarifies. No mood can be maintained quite unaltered through the course of hours.

176 Charges Are Dropped

PALO ALTO (UPI)—The dismissal of 176 charges Thursday leaves just seven persons facing court action as the result of a melee following a rock music concert in Palo Alto July 11.

Charges against 80 juveniles had been dismissed previously.

Municipal Court Judge Sidney Feinberg took the latest action after District Attorney Louis B. Berna said he had insufficient evidence to prosecute.

HOW TO PLAY

WINNING BRIDGE

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Adventuresome Temperament Can Make Results Different

Some of the results you get at bridge depend on your temperament as much as on your skill. Some players like to take chances; others like to play close to the vest. The difference shows up in one of the hands played a few weeks ago at the world championship in Stockholm.

Opening lead — ♠ A

The bidding was substantially the same at both tables of the match. In the first room North responded two clubs to the opening bid of one no-trump. This was the normal Stayman Convention, asking South to show a major suit of four or more cards if he held such a suit.

In the first room South bid two hearts, and North promptly jumped to four hearts. It may have been North's assured manner or it may have been East's cautious temperament — but East did not double four hearts. South had to go down two, losing three trumps, one diamond and one club; and the penalty was 200 points.

MORE VENTURESOME

In the other room, American expert Billy Eisenberg was more adventurous with the East cards. He was willing to double four hearts for penalties even though the bidding sounded just as assured.

North's response of two diamonds was a variety of the Stayman Convention known as "Two-Way-Stayman." A response of two clubs looks for a part score in the major suits, but a response of two diamonds looks for game in a major suit. Having shown game ambitions by bidding two diamonds, North could later afford to bid only three hearts rather than jump to four hearts.

WILLING GAMBLE

Eisenberg was sure of three trump tricks with the East hand, and he might get four trumps if dummy unexpectedly turned up with the queen of hearts. The setting trick might come from as little as a queen or jack in the West hand. East was willing to gamble that his partner would turn up with something. West did, as it happened, and the penalty was 500 instead of only 200 points.

It helps to have a partner who turns up with a king or two when you make a slightly speculative double.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You hold:

♠ — 10 8 3 2
♥ — A K J 10
♦ — 10 2
♣ — 10 8 7.

What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two hearts. Despite your magnificent holding in trumps, the hand is not worth a stronger response.

SERVING ALL OF MARIN COUNTY

28 EDITORIAL PAGE San Rafael, Calif. Saturday, August 8, 1970

The Editor's Notebook

Ferryboats Not The Final Answer; Bus Study Vital

"HOW ABOUT THE return of ferryboat service? Will it really solve Marin's commute problems?" asked the veteran newsman presently working in San Francisco.

His question hits the nail on the head. It is the question which the Golden Gate Bridge and Highway District is committed to spend millions to answer. ((Millions of tollpayers' dollars, that is.)

The proof of the pudding is, of course, in the eating. We are about to begin that. The new ferry service may start operating as early as next week.

The eve of the pudding-eating is hardly the time for safe predictions, but we proceed to make them anyway.

The answer to the newsman's question is: "No, ferryboats will not provide the final solution. Some commuters will use them eagerly and will enjoy leaving their cars on this side of the bay. Unfortunately, these will be a monority. If their absence is felt at all on the highways during the commute hours, the relief will be only temporary. Traffic will increase. Within few months at most the automobile commute situation will be as difficult as ever."

If and when newer, faster boats are put into service and new terminals are opened, such as that envisioned for the mouth of Corte Madera Creek, the same sequence of events will repeat itself. Each time relief, if any, will be but temporary.

WHY WILL THIS be so?

First, there will still be a traffic and parking problem getting to and from ferry terminals. If you have to take your car out on the highway and face these problems, you might as well make the effort worthwhile by driving all the way into San Francisco. After all, you will get there quicker driving than by ferry.

Second, if and when a good feeder bus system is established to carry commuters to and from Marin ferry terminals, let us consider what will happen. To make sure you do not miss your bus, you must get to the bus stop five to 10 minutes early. To make sure you don't miss your ferry, you must take a bus which will get you to the terminal five or 10 minutes before your boat leaves.

All this transferring will add 10 or 20 minutes to your commute time — twice a day, in the morning and again in the evening. Same thing happens when you get to San Francisco. And the ferry is slower. The trip takes longer.

Only a minority of commuters will choose to spend so much additional time commuting each day. A majority will prefer to sleep a bit later each morning and get home a bit earlier each evening, at the cost of bucking traffic and parking problems.

As with the present Tiburon ferry, however, there will be those who feel ferries are the only way to go. The additional time is small price to pay for the savoring of each moment of relaxation aboard the ferryboat coming and going from one's daily toil. Unfortunately, this view is held by only a minority of the total commuter population.

When fog, and storms and labor stoppages interfere with service, ferryboats become less attractive even for their strongest supporters.

No, Mr. Veteran Newsman, our prediction is that feryboats will not provide the final solution for Marin's commute problems.

IF NOT FERRYBOATS, what?

Rapid transit trains, like BART?

Perhaps. But they, too, may turn out like ferryboats to appeal to fewer than ALL commuters. After all, you do have the problem of getting to and from the terminals at both ends of the trip. While the train's speed may be great, the total elapsed time from home to office may be just as great or greater because of the difficulties involved in getting to and from terminals.

Because of their speed, rapid transit trains probably will none the less pull more cars from the road than will ferryboats, but the reduction in automobile traffic will not be so great as many expect.

WHERE DOES THIS leave us, then?

Back to buses.

Fortunately, the Golden Gate Bridge District is also preparing to experiment with improved bus commute service, too.

Improved service can be counted upon to increase bus useage. However, buses are subject to involvement in the same traffic congestion problems as the private car. And this is their "achilles heel."

There is a way out.

Reserved lanes on freeways exclusively for buses (and emergency vehicles). Experiments in Washington (D.C.) suburbs have been promising. Los Angeles is seriously considering a major expenditure for a major test of this approach.

Because a bus can circle the neighborhood picking up passengers, making it unnecessary to drive one's car to a terminal, it has advantages over fixed-route systems like ferries and trains.

The proposal for reserved lanes for buses deserves much more serious consideration than it has thus far received in connection with Marin's commute problems.

—Jack Craemer

Bouquets And Brickbats

A BOUQUET to naval architect Philip F. Spaulding of Seattle for his bold, imaginative plan for ferry service to Marin. Whether it can prove practical remains to be seen, but Spaulding's plan is commendable for its details and thoroughness.

A BOUQUET to Novato and Southern Marin Kiwanis Clubs for making possible the annual air fair today at Gnoss Field, Novato. We hope it proves highly successful for all concerned.

BOUQUETS to Marin County supervisors for cancelling, at least temporarily, their proposed trip to Washington to appeal for more Point Reyes National Seashore acquisition funds. The cost of transporting all five supervisors to and from the capitol, and their expenses while back there, is a drain on the county treasury which is better done without during these times when economy should be the watchword.

A BOUQUET to Supervisor Louis H. Barr for putting into words what many of us have been thinking for a long time: "There's been too much talk and not enough action in cleaning up the mess of houseboats and debris in Richardson Bay."

BOUQUETS (sad, farewell type) to San Francisco-Oakland Helicopter Airlines for good and faithful service rendered to Marin over the past years. We hope your departure is only temporary and that service will be restored soon.

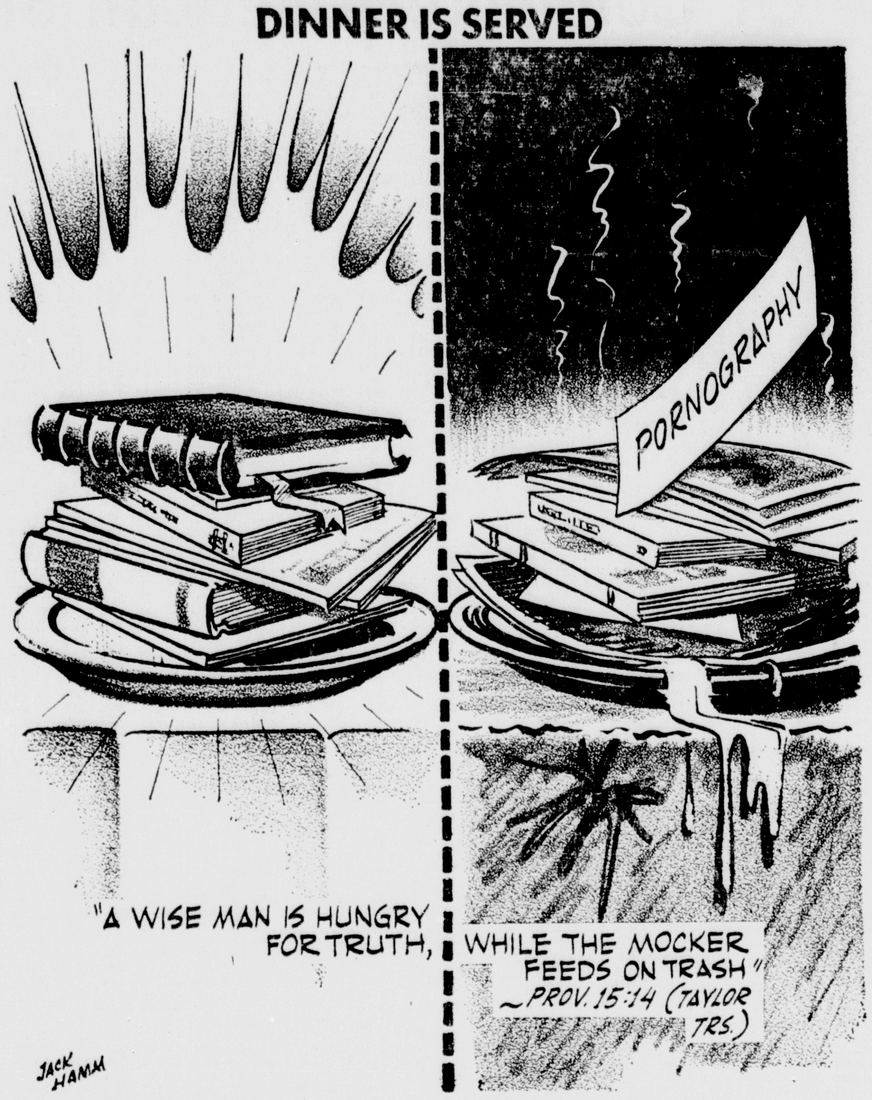
BOUQUETS (glad, welcome type) to Golden Pacific Airlines which seeks to start "third level" passenger service to and from Marin.

A BRICKBAT (non-injurious, balsa wood imitation type) to President Nixon for his injudicious comments concerning the Manson murder trial in Los Angeles. And A BOUQUET for the realistic action of Judge Charles H. Older in dealing with Manson's disruptive behavior which followed the president's blooper.

BOUQUETS (sympathy type) to Robert F. Kennedy and R. Sargent Shriver families on the occasion of their heirs facing drug abuse accusations.

BOUQUETS to the Sonoma County Board of Supervisors majority which put down efforts to have Sonoma withdrawn from ABAG, the Assn. of Bay Area Governments. The counties bordering the Bay must continue to work together to solve mutual problems.

DINNER IS SERVED



WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Center Thanks Area Knights Of Columbus

The forest Meadows Development Center, an educational program for physically and mentally handicapped children, is a publically supported school under the jurisdiction of the Marin County Board of Education. Located on the campus of Dominican College in San Rafael, the development center currently serves 42 handicapped children and provides for them a noninstitutional natural academic envoronment designed to stimulate each child to achieve his utmost potential.

This spring, the Southern Marin Council of the Knights of Columbus staged a dinner at Our Lady of Mount Carmel Parish Hall in Mill Valley. The proceeds of the evening were donated to Forest Meadows. This gift has enabled us to purchase a new stove and refrigerator for the Development Center this enhancing a hot lunch program which was recently established for the youngsters.

We wish to express our appreciation to the Knights of Columbus and commend the members of the Southern Marin Council for their generosity and support.

LINES ON LIVING

We Must Accept Changes In Life Like The Seasons

By Rabbi HAIM KEMELMAN

In the change of seasons, we see our own human situation, with spring, summer, autumn and winter rolling in a flowing and steady stream of time.

And the wisdom of life is to accept change and to find whatever beauty and grace it possesses. The all-wise tells us: "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the sun."

Certainly it's easy to rejoice in spring, to be exuberant in summer. When all is promising and bright, warm and life-laden, smiles come lightly, laughter is abundant. But when autumn comes and moods are drooping, to sustain the joy and laughter of brighter days requires wisdom.

AUTUMN IS usually associated with a melancholy spirit, with a sort of baleful resignation. We have enjoyed the summer in all its fullness of life. Yet it seemed so fleetingly short, so regrettably speeding for the accommodation of all our dreams. We hardly had time to savor the season, and behold it's rolling out of sight. And here we stand half fulfilled, half-dazed, to find change coming upon us, compelling us to accept the new and alternating realities of life and of nature.

We are more than a little saddened to see flowers fade, leaves fall, light diminishing and shadows lengthening. Do we see in the life of nature, the nature of our own life?

It seems that only a short time ago, the day dawned in a longer morning, the sun glowed in fuller warmth and the night surrendered to a longer evening. Now we are compelled by seasonal change, to accept the shortcuts in daytime, sunshine and leisure. And slowly and steadily frost is felt; its first traces of white are visible.

YET, THERE is a glory and splendor in autumn. If it is the end to that beginning which marked our spring, it is also the beginning to another natural pause and lapse that will eventually usher in another beginning, a new spring.

Growth and decay are interchangeable. We can see a new beginning at each end. Falling leaves and decay make way for a new vitality to germinate, for a new birth of spring to come after next winter's desolation.

But, meanwhile, autumn is here and there is so much beauty and truth in it to cheer the heart. If it has no heat, it has a restful serenity; if it has waning light, it has solemn depth; if it is followed by a long winter, it is surely readying for another spring and another ripening.

And if autumn could speak to us, it would tell us to surrender gracefully to change. For in surrender there is glory and strength. There is surrender in love; there is surrender in charity; there is surrender in joy and there is surrender in harmony and peace.

THE LESSON of autumn is clear; after a summer of floral and green offering to the universe, it fears not the temporary retreat of sun, warmth and growth. The downward movement is a necessary decline in the constant lurchings of the eternal see-saw of nature and life. And with every downward motion, there is sure to come an upward swing.

It is futile to resist change. It is self-defeating to refuse to turn a new page on the calendar. Like in the nature of seasons, there is beauty and truth in every age of human life, in every season of living. By moving with the seasons and by seeing a purpose in time, we can derive the fullest meaning of the moment. And if we "take care of the moments, the hours will take care of themselves," adding new and revitalized life to our years.

A SUBWAY TRAVELER put a dime into one of those fortune telling machines and got a card warning him that a severe financial reverse was on tap for him. "What nonsense," he scoffed, slipping the card into his back pants pocket. That's when he discovered that a thief had made off with his wallet containing two weeks' pay.

MARQUIS CHILDS

The Nixon Faux Pas Surrounding Manson Trial Is A Real Puzzler

LOS ANGELES — Richard Nixon and Charles Manson are at opposite poles of the social spectrum. Yet together they managed to create havoc in a murder trial conducted, even before this intervention at long odds against objective justice, in an atmosphere of sensationalism and the pressures of mass prejudice.

When Manson defied the order of the court, rose in his seat and waved a newspaper with the headline "Manson Guilty, Nixon Declares" at the jury, he was entirely in character. He is a self-made outcast, beyond all the dictates of law, morality and reason, who has spent most of his wretched life in jails and detention homes.

THE MYSTERY IS the conduct of the President of the United States, a lawyer and a member of the California Bar. Supposedly his purpose at his Denver press conference was to rebuke the Los Angeles newspaper, which he had been reading at San Clemente, for their sensational reporting of the trial of Manson and the three young women members of his "family" in the Sharon Tate murder case. From this reporter's long memory, beginning with the thrill murder in the Loeb-Leopold trial in Chicago, the reports in this instance have been relatively restrained.

This is said against the background of crimes that for sheer cold-blooded, calculated horror have seldom been equalled. As widely reported when they were committed, they conveyed a sense of all that was vicious and sick at work in a disorganized and vulnerable social order.

To sit in the courtroom even for a few hours is to get this same sense of a sick sub-world quite outside the experience of the normal and rational. At times in the closely guarded room it seems like a bitter travesty of the processes of law and order so narrowly evolved across the years. The jury put together in five painstaking weeks faces an almost-impossible task, now made doubly difficult by the President's intervention, in sequestering themselves from all but what they hear in the courtroom.

Linda Kasabian, the state's principal witness, her hair parted in the middle and pulled back from both sides of her forehead, talks in her little girl's voice about her life in the jungle of drugs and sex.

She recalls lying in a field in New Mexico, just where she can't remember, on one particular trip. This was when she experienced what she had been told was an "ego death."

The three women defendants, Leslie Van Houten, 19, Susan Atkins, 21, and Patricia Krenwinkle, 22, seem less concerned than anyone in the courtroom. They whisper among each other and with their respective attorneys. They might be giggling schoolgirls anywhere instead of three young women charged with the murder of seven persons whom they had never seen before the slaughter.

AS FOR MANSON he defies description. So much has been written about him in his own terms — savior, messiah, the master of the lives of the young who fell under his spell.

He sits stroking his beard, smiling now and then, even occasionally laughing. With the young women who set perhaps 10 feet from him he obviously has complete rapport. They were long since irrevocably joined in the sub-world and now in this trial which has its dubious legal aspects they are as one.

ART BUCHWALD

These Days It's Hard To Keep Track Of Your Kids

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Art Buchwald took off for Tahiti before anyone could catch him. He left behind what he claims are some of his more memorable columns.)

WASHINGTON — Nobody likes to talk about it, but there is a lot of kid-swapping going on in the United States. It isn't going on just in the suburbs or the small towns, but in the larger cities as well.

I hadn't realized how prevalent kid-swapping was until I moved to Washington. One night I came home from the office and instead of finding my dark-haired little beauties I discovered a 7-year-old blonde stranger doing the twist.

"Who's she?" I asked my wife.

"That's Ann Lindsay. She's staying here for the night with Connie."

"Where's Jennifer?" I asked.

"SHE'S SLEEPING at Priscilla's house because Ann Lindsay's sleeping here."

"Who's Priscilla?"

"Jennifer didn't know her last name, but she says she's her best friend."

"That's nice. Where is Joel?"

"He's sleeping at his friend's, B.J. He said if Jennifer can sleep somewhere else so can he."

"Where does that leave us?" I asked my wife.

"Well, we had three to start with, we got rid of two for the night, and we gained one, so we're only short one."

"It saves on food," I agreed.

"NOT REALLY," my wife said. "We had fish tonight, but Ann Lindsay doesn't like fish, so I had to go out and get her a steak. Then when Connie saw Ann was getting a steak she wanted one, too."

"I wouldn't mind having a steak myself," I said.

"You can't. Somebody's got to eat the fish."

The next weekend when I came home Connie was missing, but Jennifer had two friends and Joel had B.J.

At 8 o'clock I ordered them all to bed.

"B.J.'s father lets him watch television until midnight every night," Joel, who is 9 years old, said.

"Is that true, B.J.?" I asked.

"Sometimes later," B.J. said without batting an eye.

"WHEN I STAYED at B.J.'s last week," Joel said, "we didn't go to bed until two in the morning.

"My parents don't like me to go to bed early," B.J. said, "because then I wake up early."

"Well, why don't we just call up your parents and ask them what time you go to bed?"

"Oh, you don't have to do that," B.J. said hurriedly. "They've probably gone out to a movie."

Just then the phone rang. It was Mrs. Lindsay, who said, "What time do you usually put Connie to bed?"

"Eight o'clock," I said.

"SHE SAID YOU let her stay up till midnight to watch television. I was a little worried." Mrs. Lindsay seemed relieved.

Later that evening I said to my wife, "We've got to put a halt to this kid-swapping. Everyone on Cleveland Avenue is starting to talk."

"Oh, it's harmless," my wife said, "and they get so much fun out of it."

But I knew what I was talking about. A few weeks later I came home and found three kids at the dinner table. None of them mine.

"What happened?" I asked.

My wife was rather embarrassed. "There's been a dreadful mix-up. Joel invited Francis over to sleep with him, but he forgot he'd accepted an invitation to sleep at Butch's. Jennifer and Connie were invited over to Karen's, but after they left, Veronica and Mary Elisabeth showed up and said they had been invited over here. I didn't have the heart to send them home."

"So now we've got three kids that don't even belong to us," I said.

"Yes," my wife said, "and guess what? They said their mothers let them stay up until midnight to watch television."

FROM V-J DAY TO VIETNAM

A Generation Of Asian Entanglement For U.S.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Twenty-five years ago this week President Truman announced the unconditional surrender of Japan and the end of World War II. Now, a generation later, Japan and the United States are firm friends but elsewhere in the Orient U.S. forces are still engaged in battle. The following article, by a UPI correspondent who recently spent several years in Asia, traces the course of events in this turbulent area during the past 25 years.

By JOHN F. BARTON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — "I have just received this afternoon a message from the Japanese government in reply to the message forwarded to that government by the Secretary of State on Aug. 11. I deem this reply a full acceptance of the Potsdam Declaration, which specifies the unconditional surrender of Japan."

Thus did President Harry S Truman, in a tense voice reflecting the high drama of the moment, inform the world on a hot and humid night 25 years ago that the Second World War was over. The time was 7:00 p.m., Washington Time, Aug. 14, 1945.

It was three years, eight months and five days after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor shattered the U.S. Pacific fleet and plunged the United States into war in Asia as well as Europe.

The victory which Truman announced was to prove as traumatic for the United States as defeat was for Japan. The super bomb which brought Japan's surrender also launched the atomic age. Neither the world nor Asia would ever be the same.

Hopes for world peace quickly froze in the stark reality of the cold war between the western allies and the Communist world. The political vacuum caused by the collapse of the Japanese empire sparked a power struggle in Asia that eventually polarized the Communist world between Moscow and Peking and engulfed the United States into two land wars —Korea and Vietnam.

If Iwo Jima and Guadalcanal were far away places with strange sounding names in wartime America, Seoul and Saigon, Da Nang and My Lai were to become household words to a later generation.

Japan's defeat also signalled the end of colonialism and the rise of nationalism in Asia. As a result, the United States finds itself more involved in Asia in 1970 than anyone imagined on that hot August evening in 1945.

With the collapse of the French empire, the defeat of Chiang Kai-shek by the Communists and the planned withdrawal of Britain by mid-1971, the United States is the only major World War II ally to maintain a dominant role in Asia.

Spurred by domestic unrest and growing public dissatisfaction with the Vietnam War, President Nixon appears determined to honor America's military commitments in Asia but to adopt a lower profile based on more economic and less military aid to the area.

But even as Nixon proceeds with a measured reduction of the U.S. military presence in Vietnam, Korea, the Philippines and Japan, there is public apprehension that somehow the United States will be drawn depper into war in Laos and Cambodia.

The President sees Japan playing a major role in his effort to help Asian nations help themselves. In his State of the Union message this year, Nixon described Japan as the "linchpin" of American foreign policy in Asia.

He has encouraged Japan to combine its own economic might with that of the United States to help develop underdeveloped nations, especially in Southeast Asia. In a brief quarter century, Japan and the United States have gone full circle from wartime enemies to peacetime allies.

Truman's announcement of the Japanese surrender was a dramatic climax, but hardly unexpected. Peace rumors had been circulating for weeks, particuarly after the Aug. 6 A-bombing of Hiroshima.

In fact, a war weary world started celebrating Japan's defeat at 2 a.m. (Washington time) that Aug. 14.

But 13 long hours passed before Secretary of State James F. Byrnes, nervously pacing up and down his office, received at 3 p.m. the first official information that a Japanese surrender note was, in fact, enroute.

At 6:10 p.m. the Swiss charge d'affaires rushed the Japanese note to Byrnes. The secretary sped to the White House, where 50 minutes later a jubilant Truman announced the war's end, setting off public celebrations that lasted several days even though V-J Day was not proclaimed until formal surrender ceremonies were held aboard the USS Missouri in Tokyo Bay on Sept. 2 (Sept. 1 Washington time).

Like Germany a few short months before, the Japanese empire lay in ashes.

The toll for both victor and vanquished was staggering. American casualties, in both European and Pacific theatres, were 1,078,162 —three times those of the First World War. Official figures listed 292,131 Americans killed in battle, another 115,185 dead from other causes and 670,846 wounded.

Japan was devastated, its teeming population starving. In a Tokyo radio broadcast on Aug. 23, 1945, Japanese officials claimed that nearly 10 million persons had been killed, wounded or left homeless during the war. They said 44 cities had been almost completely wiped out and another 37 cities had at least one-third of their industrialized areas completely gutted by allied bombing raids.

The death toll from the first atomic bomb ever used in war, dropped by a U.S. plane on Hiroshima in the early morning hours of Aug. 6, 1945, was still estimates of the immediate estimates of the immidiate dead from the blast and radiation exposure varied from 80,000 to 200,000. Everthing in the four central square miles of the city was pulverized.

U.S. military officials said later the Hiroshima bomb was made obsolete by the atom bomb dropped only three days later on Nagasaki, where the immediate death toll estimated ranged from 39,000 to 74,000.

It was only after the war that American military authorities discovered Japan had been closer to defeat than U.S. officials realized. On March 18 all Japanese schools except first grade classes were closed for a year and students mobilized for food and munitions production and air raid defense. Emperor Hirohito declared in a public message June 23 that "the present crisis is unprecedented in scope in our national history." Rice ration cuts followed.

Byrnes also revealed that Japanese officials in late June asked the Soviet Union, then not at war with Japan, to use its good offices to sue for peace. Instead, Soviet Premier Josef Stalin, apparently believing the Russians would have a strong voice in the Japanese occupation, declared war on Japan Aug. 8, two days after the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and only six days before Japan actually surrendered.

The occupation, which was to last nearly seven years, began when Col. John Lackey, of Norfolk, Va., landed the first group of technicians of the U.S. Fifth Air Force at Atsugi Air base near Tokyo about 9 a.m. on Aug. 28, 1945. They prepared Atsugi for the main landing of airborne troops scheduled for Aug. 30.

Under the leadership of Gen. Douglas MacArthur as Supreme Allied Commander, the United States encouraged social and political reforms which broke the hold of the old industrial-military complex over the country, laid the foundation for a miraculous economic recovery, and provided a constitution which renounced war, prohibited nuclear weapons, and declared the emperor was not divine, but merely "the symbol of the state and of the unity of the people."

The occupation also laid the foundation for a strong friendship between Washington and Tokyo which persists today despite increasing disagreements on trade matters.

But if all went remarkably smoothly in Japan, it did almost nowhere else in Asia. The brilliant foresight with which the U.S. government was able, even during wartime, to plan an enlightened occupation of Japan did not carry over into foreign policy decisions concerning other Asian nations.

Even as the Japanese surrender was being announced, colonialist powers were returning to Asia to resume their rule, short though it would prove to be in most cases. Britain quickly reasserted its authority in Hong Kong, Singapore, Burma and other colonial possessions lost to Japan.

Truman abandoned the apparent intention of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt to prevent France from regaining Indochina. While there is no indication that Roosevelt, had he lived, would have had any more success with France than he had in arguing with Britain for Indian independence, there are indications that Ho Chi Minh, who had collaborated with the allies against Japan, had hoped he would. That might have prevented the future Vietnam War which so far has cost 43,000 American lives.

Instead, Truman agreed to let the British occupy the southern part of Vietnam and the Nationalist Chinese occupy the northern part until French colonial officials could resume their rule there.

In Korea, the United States agreed to let the Soviets liberate that part of the nation north of the 38th parallel, with the result that Stalin installed the Communist regime of Premier Kim Il Sung there. The seeds of the Korean War were sown, a war in which 33,629 Americans died in battle, 20,617 from other causes and 103,284 were wounded before the armistice became effective in July, 1953.

Postwar colonialism was to prove shortlived, however. The United States willingly set an example by granting independence to the Philippines on July 4, 1946, in accordance with an act passed by the U.S. Congress in 1934.

Other colonial powers followed suit, more by necessity than desire. Mainly because of staggering war-caused economic problems at home, Britain granted independence to India and Pakistan in 1947, to Burma and Ceylon in 1948. On Sept. 16, 1963, London recognized Malaysia, the coalition of her former colonies, from which Singapore broke off on Aug. 9, 1965.

Happiness, Humiliation Marked Signing Of Japanese Surrender

EDITOR'S NOTE: Frank Tremaine, now UPI Vice President and General Manager for North America, covered World War II in the Pacific for United Press from the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor to the surrender ceremonies aboard the USS Missouri in Tokyo Bay nearly four years later. In the following personal report he recalls the day the Japanese signed away their sovereignty.

By FRANK TREMAINE
U.P. International

Vice Admiral Jock McCain broke into a little dance step, then grabbed Fleet Admiral Bill Halsey by the arm. They grinned at each other like a couple of kids just out of school.

Milling around them on the small gallery deck of the USS Missouri were some 50 Allied generals and admirals. The 45,000-ton battleship, her guns pointed skyward and the flags of the Alied powers fluttering in a light breeze, was anchored at last in Tokyo Bay.

It was shortly before 9 a.m. Sept. 2, 1945. Clouds hid the sun and Mt. Fujiyama which should have loomed to the west. The generals and admirals on the gallery deck and thousands of other officers and men hanging from the superstructure of the Missouri and aboard dozens of other warships anchored nearby awaited the Japanese surrender delegation for the final act of the war which had begn 3,900 miles to the east with the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941.

Then a small American boat was sighted moving through the armada toward the Missouri. She pulled up to the starboard side while the generals and admirals assembled in ranks along the inboard side and the rear of the small deck.

Up the steep stairs from the small boat came the Japanese delegation.

There were 11 of them—seven generals and admirals in uniform, three men formally attired in top hats and morning coats and one man in a rumpled white suit. They looked uncomfortable and unhappy as they assembled before the waiting Allied party on the deck of one of the world's most powerful warships, built since their bombs dropped at Pearl Harbor.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who had been designated Supreme Allied Commander in Japan, stepped forward. His face was grim and one wondered about his thoughts at this moment.

He told the Japanese it was his intention to discharge his responsibilities with "justice and tolerance" but "to ensure that the terms of the surrender are fully, promptly and faithfully complied with."

Then he said, "It is my earnest hope and, indeed, the hope of all mankind that from this solemn occasion a better world shall emerge out of the blood and carnage of the past, a world dedicated to the dignity of man and the fulfilment of his most cherished wish—for freedom, tolerance and justice."

First to sign for the Japanese was newly-designated Foreign Minister Mamoru Shigemitsu.

He doffed his top hat as he seated himself with some difficulty at the table and began the distasteful job of signing away his country's sovereignty. One could not know then that soon Shigemitsu would be convicted as a war criminal, would serve five years in prison, then rise again to post of foreign minister in less than another five years, a symbol of the firm but constructive occupation administered by MacArthur.

Shigemitsu signed where MacArthur told him to, once in a black-bound copy for the Japanese in their language and once in a gold-bound copy in English for the Allies. He was followed by Gen. Yoshijiro Umetsu, chief of the Imperial General Staff, who signed for the Japanese armed forces.

When Umetsu stepped back, MacArthur said, "Will Gen. Wainwright and Gen. Percival step forward while I sign?" Lt. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright, who surrendered at Corregidor, and British Gen. Ernest Percival, who surrendered at Singapore, came to attention behind the chair in which MacArthur seated himself to sign as Supreme Commander in Japan.

MacArthur appeared to be under considerable emotional stress. His hand shook slightly as he took up the first of five pens with which he signed the documents. When he had completed the signing, he rose and handed one pen to Wainwright, another to Percival. They saluted smartly.

Then Fleet Admiral Chester Nimitz, Supreme Allied Commander, Pacific Ocean Areas, stepped forward to sign for the United States.

Then followed admirals and generals representing Great Britain, China, the Soviet Union, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, France and the Neterlands.

It was approximately 9:30 a.m when the signing was completed and the Japanese withdrew. The sun was breaking through the clouds as MacArthur spoke again, warning that "a way must now be found to preserve the peace because science has given us war of utter destructiveness. We have had our last chance. If we do not devise some greater and more equitable system, Armegeddon will be at our door."

This Week In The World

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Another spotlight was focused on the "Manson Family" murder trial, one of the nation's most sensational cases in years, when President Nixon stepped in and asserted the hippie cultist patriarch was guilty of the Tate-LaBianca killings.

Presumably a slip of the tongue as Nixon met with newsmen in Denver, the remark that Charles Manson "was guilty, directly or indirectly, of eight murders without reason" nevertheless reverberated to the Los Angeles courtroom where defense lawyers immediately petitioned for a mistrial.

Ironically, the President made the comment prior to joining a series of private meetings with more than 100 federal and state officials gathered for a conference on crime control.

Nixon, a lawyer, apparently was unaware of his remark or its gravity and, despite an attempt by White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler to correct the statement shortly afterwards, no clarification was issued until the President landed at Andrews Air Force Base on his return to Washington.

In his clarifying statement, Nixon said he was "misunderstood" and added, "the last thing I would do is prejudice the legal rights of any person in any circumstances.

"I do not know and did not intend to speculate as to whether the Tate defendants are guilty, in fact, or not," he said.

Manson and three of his female followers are accused of slaying actress Sharon Tate, grocer Leo LaBianca and six others during two nights of violence last August.

Much of the recent proceedings in the courtroom centered on defense demands for a mistrial on grounds Nixon prejudiced the verdict, but the motions were denied by Judge Charles H. Older.

Manson flashed a newspaper headline of the Nixon incident at the jury, which has been sequestered throughout the trial, but the gambit staged in efforts to get a mistrial failed.

Around The World, Around The Clock

MOSCOW — Soviet and West German officials agreed to the text of a treaty opening the way to improved relations between Bonn and Eastern Europe.

WASHINGTON — The United States and Spain signed an executive agreement promising the equivalent of $300 million to Spain in exchange for American rights for bases. The agreement was contracted without congressional consent, which was not required.

PARIS — The new chief U.S. negotiator at the peace talks, David K.E. Bruce, proposed a renewed effort to settle the Vietnam War in his first day on the job, but the Communists replied Bruce added nothing new to the bargaining.

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird announced a draft call of 39,500 for the remainder of the year, making the 1970 total of 163,500 the lowest since 1964.

JERUSALEM — Israel formally accepted the U.S. Mideast peace plan amidst a walkout from the coalition government of the minority, hawkish Gahal party. Egypt shot down an Israeli Phantom fighter bomber over the Suez Canal.

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex. — Hurricane Celia, packing winds up to 145 miles an hour, slammed into the Texas Gulf Coast and caused extensive damage. President Nixon declared the region a disaster area.

OAKLAND, Calif. — Black Panther leader Huey P. Newton was released from prison after a bail hearing. He had been sentenced to two to 15 years in the death of an Oakland policeman.

WASHINGTON — The House passed and sent to President Nixon legislation creating within a year an independent government agency to run the post office and granting postal workers a pay hike.

Monterey Policemen End One-Day Strike

MONTEREY (UPI) —Monterey's 60-man police force ended a one-day strike today after accepting a new pay offer from the City Council.

No major crimes were reported in this coastal resort city while day-long negotiations between police representatives and the council took place Friday.

The two sides compromised on a salary hike of 8 1-2 per cent across the board plus educational incentive pay. The police had been demanding a 15 per cent pay boost, while the council offered six per cent.

The new pay scales will raise policemen's wages from the current range of $646 to $785 a month to a range of $702 to $853 plus the incentive pay.

Only three policemen were on duty during the brief strike — the chief, deputy chief and a captain. Monterey County Sheriff's deputies were available had they been needed.

Before the strike, during negotiations that started in May, policemen shaved off beards they had grown for Monterey's bicentennial celebration and wore their blue uniforms instead of special brown ones.

A week later they returned to the brown uniforms and tried to fake the beards. None of this helped in the negotiations and the strike followed.

Meanwhile, police in San Jose voted to authorize "steps necessary" to get higher pay — including a strike —and a police walkout in Petaluma was delayed at least temporarily by a court injunction.

The San Jose policemen voted to authorize a walkout but told their representatives to continue bargaining "as long as the city is willing to negotiate in good faith."

Astronaut In Germany

FRANKFURT, Germany (UPI) — Astronaut Neil Armstrong, the first man to set foot on the moon, arrived in West Germany today to take part in ceremonies marking the 50th anniversary of competitive glider flying.

San Francisco School Board To Await Integration Order

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) —A federal judge will have to issue a court order if he wants San Francisco's schools completely integrated by September of 1971, the school board decided Friday.

The board refused to go along with U.S. Dist. Judge Stanley A. Weigel's suggestion that it agree to draw up an integration plan by next January and implement it by the following September.

President Alan Nichols said after an emergency, closed-door meeting that the board wanted more time in order to involve the community in any changes.

A federal suit demanding immediate integration of the city's schools was filed by the NAACP.

"The NAACP represents only one group," Nichols said. "We want the entire community involved in whatever plan is developed."

But he said the board would obey if the judge ordered it to prepare the plan and implement next year.

Sept. 10 Is Last Day To Register For Nov. 3 Vote

Sept. 10 is the last day to register to vote in the Nov. 3 Sonoma County General election, according to Eugene D. Williams, county clerk.

New residents must have been a citizen of California for at least one year and a county resident for three months by the election date to be eligible.

Persons who failed to vote in the 1968 general election or have changed addresses should also register.

Williams said persons may register at 34 locations in southern Sonoma. Registration locations may be located by calling the registrar of voters office in Santa Rosa.

Bilingual registrars are available at several locations for Spanish-speaking residents. Incapacitated persons may request a registrar to make a house call.

Design Honor To Library At Mill Valley

Trustees of the Mill Valley Public Library have accepted a large bronze plaque awarded by the American Institute of Architects for the library's design and are looking for a place to install it.

Librarian Alberta L. Hankenson said trustees conferred Thursday night with Robert N. Huston of the San Francisco architectural firm of Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons on the placement of the plaque.

A dedication ceremony will be held when the honor award is mounted, Miss Hankenson said. The award was the only one given to a California building in 1969.

Board members also discussed the library's continuing problem of theft of letters from the sign in front of the building. They decided to mount the letters flush with the wall instead of on risers, thus making them more difficult to steal.

Trustees also decided that books for which there is a heavy demand will be available for seven days only and may not be renewed. Miss Hankenson said it had been the library's policy to buy duplicate copies of popular books, but the cost proved too great.

A Bohemian Village Blooms In Inverness

See Page M8

AN ORIGINAL PAINTING by Henri Chevalier showed Marin County's historic Ross Landing, as developed by Ross Valley pioneer James Ross, as it appeared in 1883, looking southwest. It is now the site of the College of Marin in Kentfield with the old waterfront from which were once shipped tons of timber and produce now filled in. The original painting belonged to San Francisco bookstore owner Warren Howell when the Independent-Journal first reproduced this picture in 1962.

The Valley They Named For James Ross

(Editor's Note: This is another of the manuscripts on early-day Marin County events, places and people completed by the late Florence Donnelly, Independent-Journal historian, for the Marin Magazine prior to her death.)

By FLORENCE DONNELLY

The name Ross heard today in Marin County immediately brings to mind tree-lined streets and beautiful homes set in landscaped gardens.

But it was not like that when James Ross and his wife came to Marin in 1852.

The Indians had had their rancherias on the land. And after the coming of the white man, it became part of a vast land grant, awarded first to Juan B.R. Cooper, brother-in-law of famed Gen. Mariano G. Vallejo.

In the grant to Cooper, made by Gov. Juan B. Alvarado in 1840, the land was given the lengthy name Punta de Quintin Corte del Madera La Laguna y Canada de San Anselmo, and it stretched from San Quentin across the San Rafael hills, skirting the land grant to Domingo Sais, through what became Ross Valley and on beyond.

COOPER SOLD his land to Benjamin Rush Buckelew who sold large parcels of the property before he died, still a young man, in November of 1859. His widow, Martha, made still more sales.

One of the largest of these parcels was bought by James Ross who was to give his name to the area he acquired.

Ross was born in Petty, Invernesshire, Scotland, in 1839. He and Annie Sophia Greyling of Deal, Kent, England, were married in Australia.

THEY HAD three children. They were Annie Sophia Esther, James Jr. and Rebecca.

The Ross holdings in Marin were bounded on the San Rafael side by land owned by J.O.B. Short and his brother, Jacob, and went to the summit of Bald Hill and extended through the Ross Valley.

The pioneer Mr. and Mrs. Ross led a busy life. He built a sawmill where logs were cut for the construction of houses and other buildings plus shipping docks on his property and proceeded rapidly with its development, while his wife reared her family and with the help of her servants provided meals for her husband's many workers. Ross envisioned, not a ranch, but a town and busy shipping center.

BY MARCH 26, 1865, the Marin County Journal reported:

"Ross Landing — This place is evidently looming up, bound to be a place of importance some day. It is the point from which is shipped the greater portion of cord wood in this vicinity. During the busy season from 10 to 12 vessels, ranging from 10 to 50 tons capacity, may be seen lying at the embarcadero taking on freight for San Francisco.

"From this point is also shipped the lumber manufactured at the Lagunitas sawmill owned by Shaver and Co. We understand that the mill soon will commence running and a great quantity of lumber turned out in the coming season.

"A PACKET schooner plies tri-weekly to San Francisco and is represented as doing a fair business.

"The town contains 15 or 20 houses, two stores, a butcher shop and a shoemaker's shop, while a blacksmith's shop is in the course of erection. We are informed that brickmaking will be carried on extensively the present summer."

Donald Perry Sr., who married Annie Worn, a Ross descendent, wrote many articles on Marin County history and in telling of its early transportation system said that prior to 1884 "all shipping was done through the Ross Landing wharf."

AND THE LATE Howard Watson Bray, in a talk before the Marin County Historical Society, recalled a visit he made to Ross Landing in 1881 with the captain of his father's steamer, the Tulare. The Tulare, he said, visited the wharf regularly to pick up hay, grain, potatoes and other produce hauled there by farmers of Marin and Sonoma counties.

In the same talk I can remember Bray telling how, when he was young, he took a job with a large steel and metal wholesale company in San Francisco and was assigned a sales territory that included all of Marin.

He said: "In its early days Marin County had a large dairy production and there was always a great demand for tin milk pans, which were manufactured by hand in different tin shops in San Francisco, and all seamed. I sold gross after gross of these in Marin.

"THEN ABOUT this time there was developed in the East a special milk pan that was stamped 'seamless.' I sold many of these, too, in Marin.

"I made my trip through this section once a month in a one-horse sulky, as there was no stage or other land transportation at the time." And Ross Landing, he added, was a regular stopping point.

But it was Donald Perry Sr. who wrote: "The Ross family lived in a log house situated where the old Bosqui house was built later." (Editor's Note: Florence Donnelly related the history of this property in the Independent-Journal of Sept. 25, 1965.)

THE ROSS STORY

PERRY ADDED that the log house was destroyed by fire, and that Mrs. Ross, who survived her husband by many years, then resided in a house that is now in the central part of Ross.

Donald Perry Jr., his son, remembers visiting Mrs. Ross at her home where the Ross School playground is now located. After her death a part of the property was sold to the town of Ross for park purposes.

An article printed in the Marin County Journal of Aug. 6, 1870, reported:

"THE DIAMOND drill: George Worn is now boring for an artesian well at his residence with this invention. He has gone down a depth of some 130 feet in solid rock within a short space of time and hopes, when through the rock, to obtain the necessary supply of water."

Worn, who was born in Dublin Ireland, and came to California in 1849, and his wife, the former Annie Sophia Esther Ross, had shared in the division of the Ross property with the passing of her father.

To the widow of the senior Ross had gone all of what is now the town of Ross, Kentfield, Larkspur "and below there."

TO THE WORNS went the San Anselmo area that lay within the ranch grant boundaries.

To the widow of the Ross son, James Ross Jr., the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Miller who later remarried to James Tunstead, went the Linda Vista tract, some San Anselmo property outside the ranch, and 20 acres in the Greenbrae vicinity.

The second Ross daughter, Rebecca, who had married Ross Makin, received the Laurel Grove territory.

DONALD PERRY Sr. wrote: "Where the Catholic Church (St. Anselm's) is now located was the dividing line between the holdings. Mrs. Worn also had 23 acres where the Kittle home was built."

The Worns sold that parcel to the Jonathan Kittles — and it was later to become the Marin Art and Garden Center — , and they concentrated upon farming their holdings in the general area of what later became the seminary athletic field.

Their water supply came from a large spring far up the slopes to the south of Bald Hill. Iron piping was not then in use, so a small lead pipe was laid for the more than a mile from the spring. It was laid quite shallow so that frequently when a cow chanced to step upon it in wet weather, the pipe would collapse.

THEN THE children would be sent out with hammer and a brick to find the bottleneck and beat the pipe back into its proper shape so that water would flow again.

Donald Perry Sr. told, too, of listening to stories by George Worn Jr. of how he frequently had to swim his mules when he went ploughing across a formidable creek that ran between the barn and the house of the Misses Daniels at Ross Avenue and Jones Street.

Perry was a source for interesting stories about other prominent Ross Valley residents as well, including the noted lawyer Hall McAllister of Kentfield, covered recently in another of our Marin Magazine articles, and yet another prominent lawyer, William Barber, who was a cousin of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

THE JOURNAL on June 12, 1969, reported: "Work on the road from San Rafael to Ross Landing, over the hill and through Short's Addition, was commenced on Tuesday last."

But it was the building of the railroad through the Ross Valley that really opened up the area to land travel and brought an influx of new residents such as the McAllisters and Barbers. Wealthy men with offices in San Francisco could now buy huge estates in Marin, live there in comfort with large staffs of gardeners to beautify and maintain their grounds and servants to attend to their mansions, while commuting to and from their work.

The Marin County map of 1873 shows Ross Landing, the Ross Homestead, the 79 acres of land of Albert Dibblee, and various unnamed tracts of land.

THESE WERE the beginnings of a trend that were to see more and more homesites in the Ross Valley as it became quite the thing to have a "country house" in Ross. Indeed, a good many, charmed by the beauty and the climate, of the countryside decided to live there full-time.

Trees were planted along the roadsides to provide shade for these people when they rode in their carriages to the train station to commute to work or on to San Rafael to shop. This marked the origins of many of the large and handsome trees that are so distinctive of Ross today.

The society Blue Book of 1896-97 season listed a number of Ross residents, among them Mr. and Mrs. William Barber and the Misses Alice and Mary, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bosqui and the Misses Laura and Helen, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bothin, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Butler, Mr. and Mrs. James Coffin, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dibblee, A. J., Harrison, Benjamin R. and Anita, Mrs. Jonathan G. Kittle, Mrs. Anna Ross and Miss Annie S. Worn.

THE ARGONAUT on June 12, 1905, reported:

"The wedding of Miss Louise Worn, daughter of Mrs. George A. Worn Jr., to Mr. John T. Beales took place at San Anselmo Chapel, Ross Valley, Tuesday at 3 o'clock."

As occurred elsewhere in Marin, the Ross Valley experienced another influx in population in the refugees who came from San Francisco after the 1906 earthquake and fire. Many who had previously lived in Ross only during the summers now

THIS OLD MAP, from the Dr. W. Scott Polland Collection, shows the location of Ross Landing, founded by James Ross, in relationship to other landmarks of the Ross Valley, including the Murray house, still standing in Kentfield, and the brickyard where Jean Escalle later ran his inn and winery. Also shown is the two-story adobe Bickerstaff house on what later became the George Niven property in Larkspur. White denotes water, the lighter shading mudflats and the darker shading land.

SOME ROSS VALLEY neighbors and friends had gathered on the porch of the mansion of William Barber, prominent attorney, for some socializing. Among the guests were the Worn sisters.

chose to reside there permanently. Other newcomers bought land and built homes.

OLD NEWSPAPER files make frequent mention of Makin Grade.

Donald Perry Sr. explained that it was Ross Makin, husband of Rebecca Ross, and the inheritors of the Laurel Grove area, who developed the grade.

The Makin Grade was the road that ran from Laurel Grove over the hill to San Rafael, coming down into the county seat's south side. It was a favored route for horseback riders. The road no longer exists, as well surfaced streets give easy access to motorists traveling between Marin communities.

WHILE GEORGE Worn was a gifted horticulturist, there was an artistic strain in the women of his family. Daughters Isabella and Grace, who never married, and Annie, who, as noted earlier, became Mrs. Donald Perry, delighted in decorating the chapel in Ross with the flowers they had grown in their garden. They took a special interest in the chapel, for their grandmother, Mrs. James Ross Sr., had donated the land upon which the first chapel was built. The site was at the southwest corner of the county highway where it was intersected by Lagunitas Road.

The chapel was incorporated under the name San Anselm Chapel. The articles of incorporation, dated Jan. 31, 1881, names as directors William Barber, M. M. Tompkins, C. Temple Emmett and Alfred Todhunter. The last was its first clergyman.

COMPLIMENTED so much for their artistic decoration of the chapel, the three Worn sisters were encouraged to open a floral shop in San Francisco in the middle 1890s. The business was located on Sutter Street.

It was an era when miles of smilax and stiff, formal arrangements were considered creative. But the trio of sisters, shy and retiring as they were, had their own definite ideas on decoration. They insisted that their clients intrust to them the responsibility for selecting and arranging flowers. And they succeeded in bringing to the San Francisco area an entirely new concept, much freer, of flower arrangements.

SOON IT became a "must" during the years of Ned Greenway that the decorations for the San Francisco Cotillions be done by the Worn sisters. They did the arrangements, too, for the many balls honoring debutantes, and for receptions for visiting U.S. Presidents, foreign royalty and other dignitaries.

Long after the passing of the Worn sisters, many long-time Bay Area residents still remembered and spoke of the beauty of the floral decorations done by the creative women from Ross.

Donald Perry Jr., at his Sunnyside Nursery in San Anselmo, maintains a family tradition by providing plant beauty for Marin gardens and homes.

THE SMALL chapel in Ross was the setting in the spring of 1899 for the wedding of his parents, Donald Perry Sr. and Annie Worn. And no doubt the place was made splendid by floral decorations — done by the bride's talented sisters.

Residents of Ross were greatly perturbed in the early 1900s by what they regarded as an

A HISTORY OF ROSS

Women Held Land, But Men Had Vote

overly-aggressive Greater San Rafael movement. They viewed with alarm attempts to incorporate the area from the Corte Madera tunnel and White's Hill to Lucas Valley all into one metropolis under the San Rafael banner.

It was largely to prevent its inclusion in the envisioned Greater San Rafael that the city of San Anselmo was incorporated in 1907.

ROSS RESIDENTS moved, too. They petitioned the Marin County Board of Suprvisors: "It is the desire of the people to have a town of their own so that they can construct their own roads and make them the best in the land."

The Journal commented: "There has been some talk to the effect that the Kentfield territory should be included, but it was stated that Kentfield does not wish to join."

The supervisors held two days of hearings.

THE JOURNAL reported: "The discussion was held in front of a large delegation of prominent residents of Ross and Kentfield. The Kentfield people objected, arguing that the entire valley should be incorporated in one city. But the Ross Valley people countered that they were unanimous, and that outsiders should not have the right to interfere."

An election was set by the supervisors, and Ross residents voted to incorporate as a town in August of 1908.

The first trustees were E.G. Schmiedell, W. M. Brown, C. A. Meusdorffer (an architect) and A.J. Kittle. John Clute was town clerk, J. Witt (appropriately listed in the 1910 register of voters as a "capitalist") the treasurer and H.C. Rogers the marshal.

FEW OF THE pioneer men who came to Ross Valley outlived their wives, the senior Perry noted, so that the widows owned more than three-quarters of the land in the Ross Valley.

"Yet, because suffrage had not yet been granted, they had no say on the issue of incorporation," he pointed out. "As a matter of fact they were all bitterly opposed to the idea of incorporation. But while their employees — gardeners, stable men, butlers and others, had voting rights, these wealthy women had no voice in the matter."

Among the widows who were to become major Ross landholders were those bearing the names Barber, Kittle, Coffin, Moore, Dibblee, Latham, Martin, and, of course, Ross and Worn.

WHEN EVENTUALLY the original little chapel in Ross became too small for a growing congregation, it was one of these women, Mrs. James Coffin, who donated the land where St. John's Church was built and still stands.

That church and the rectory were completed in late 1911. The little chapel then became a Guild Hall and Sunday School until the construction of the Community House.

Many residents of Marin County did not welcome the era of the automobile, showing considerable foresight as to the changes it would make in their peaceful way of life.

DONALD PERRY Sr. told of the experiences of Thomas Berry of Ross who bought one of the first automobiles. "He drove it around the roads in his vicinity and it frightened the horses to such an extent that an ordinance was passed in San Rafael prohibiting the driving of such vehicles upon San Rafael streets after nightfall.

"Berry defied the ordinance and was duly arrested and convicted. He appealed to the Superior Court, but the judgment of the lower court was sustained.

"The case was brought before the State Supreme Court on a habeas corpus proceeding. Judge Angelloti wrote the opinion for the court which appears in the California Reports of 1915. That opinion stated that city authorities had acted within their rights . . . that it was, indeed, a well-known fact these vehicles frightened horses and endangered the lives of citizens.

"BERRY, EVENTUALLY, had to pay the fine."

The Worns had a close friendship with many of the old families of the area including the Moores, Winships and the Barbers.

The William Barbers had two daughters, Grace and Mary. One of the girls became the wife of Floyd Jones. She owned a goblet from which the famous Marquis de Layfayette had drunk a toast that was the family's pride.

DONALD PERRY Sr. told how the Barbers sold their sizable holdings to the Winships, and that section eventually came to be known as Winship Park.

Ross General Hospital, the valley's major institution, is the outgrowth of a sanitarium founded by Dr. Author J. Ritter, a native of Zurich, Switzerland. Dr. Ritter had done research in anthropology and allied sciences in Africa, had studied medicine in Paris, and had come to California in 1910.

He studied medicine at Stanford University, then in 1918 founded the sanitarium in Ross with 18 beds. Dr. Mary W. Harris, who became a staff member in the 1920s, said there were still but 25 beds "and only a couple of tuberculosis patients" at the time she joined.

DIRECTORS OF the sanitarium included George Rodden, Frank Foran, Dr. Fred Lowen (the president) and Dr. Rafael G. Dufficy (vice president). Miss Ena Hunt was secretary and treasurer.

In 1922 another institution, the Katharine Branson School, moved to Ross Valley, locating on 16 acres at the foot of Bald Hill in Ross on property that had originally been part of the Dibblee Estate and more recently had been owned by the John Martins whose name appears on the Town of Ross official map for 1909 as drawn by George L. Richardson, Marin County surveyor.

The school had been started in an old mansion on Fifth Avenue in San Rafael.

THE MARIN Journal in an issue in September of 1920 told of a housewarming that the Misses Katharine and Laura Branson had given for their new Branson School. Listed among the guests were the Arthur W. Fosters, the Kenneth Kingsburys, the Benjamin Dibblees, the Harrison Dibblees, the Alexander Lilleys, Mrs. Thomas Scott Brooks, Mrs. Shepard Eells, Mrs. Henry Kuechler, Mrs. Albert Dibblee, Mrs. Jonathan Kittle, Mrs. Crawford Greene, Mrs. Paul Foster, Mrs. Henry Batkin, Mrs. James K. Armsby and Mrs. James Coffin.

Many of those guests were members of Ross families.

It sometimes amuses Marinites to hear middle-aged or older men say they went to the Branson School. But in its early years, it accepted boys as pupils. And it did not, until later, become the Branson School for Girls. It was, also, after the move to Ross that the name became the Katharine Branson School honoring the co-founder who served for many years as headmistress.

THE ENROLLMENT today includes both resident and day students, and the girls come from not only throughout the Bay Area, but from across the country and from foreign lands to take advantage of a first-rate curriculum and such facilities as a large heated pool and special instruction such as western horseback riding.

Nearly 100 per cent of the Branson girls go on to four-year colleges, including Smith, Vassar, Wellesley, Radcliffe and Mount Holyoke, as well as Stanford and the University of California.

Bordering what is now called the Sir Francis Drake Boulevard, but designated on the map as the Red Hill and Ross Landing Road, is the Marin Art and Garden Center. It is property that was once the James Ross Estate, then the George Worns home, and finally the Jonathan Kittle property.

THE KITTLES remodeled the Ross home extensively in the late 1800s, but the mansion was ravaged by fire in 1931 and had to be razed.

The large barn and the Octogon House, a smaller outbuilding, escaped the flames. For a time, the barn was taken over by a private school. Today, the Ross Valley Players present their plays there, it having been their home since the 1930s.

When the Kittle heirs decided to sell the choice parcel of land, Mrs. Norman B. (Caroline) Livermore, a prime mover in the Marin Conservation League, went into action. She feared a subdivision of the property that would destroy its natural beauty. She mobilized the conservation league, nature and garden societies and cultural groups in a public subscription drive to raise the funds to buy the Kittle estate and preserve it for posterity.

IN 1945 THE Marin Art and Garden Center became an actuality, and in September a fiesta celebrated the realization of the cultural center.

The grounds are carefully attended, and buildings house art, antiques, decorations and other exhibits. A modern kitchen provides food for events such as luncheons and parties.

The annual Marin Art and Garden Fair has been held each year on the grounds under the trees and among the flowers. However, the 1970 fair, held over the Fourth of July weekend, was scheduled as the last to be conducted there. New fairgrounds are to be built at the Civic Center in the Santa Venetia area of San Rafael.

AS A MEMORIAL to Natalie Coffin Greene, daughter of the James Coffins, her husband, A. Crawford Greene, bequeathed the Phoenix Lake property to the Town of Ross.

The Greene Estate had bought the lake property from the Marin Municipal Water District.

In 1967, Isabel Kittle Dibblee of Ross gave the town 2.6 acres along Ross Creek to provide an access to the 25-acre Greene Park. Mrs. Dibblee's gift, part of her 50-acre estate, was in the memory of her late husband, Benjamin H. Dibblee.

THE LAGUNITAS Country Club of Ross is an exclusive organization with its memberships much coveted. The older families in the valley have been represented in the club for several generations.

Dances are held in the clubhouse, a rustic structure, and youngsters and parents alike enjoy the outdoor recreation the club provides.

With all its attractions, Ross has continued in the role of a quiet country town that it prefers. Industry is not invited. There is no mail delivery in the village, as many older residents still refer to it. The residents prefer to go to the postoffice to get their mail where they meet old friends and catch up on the latest news.

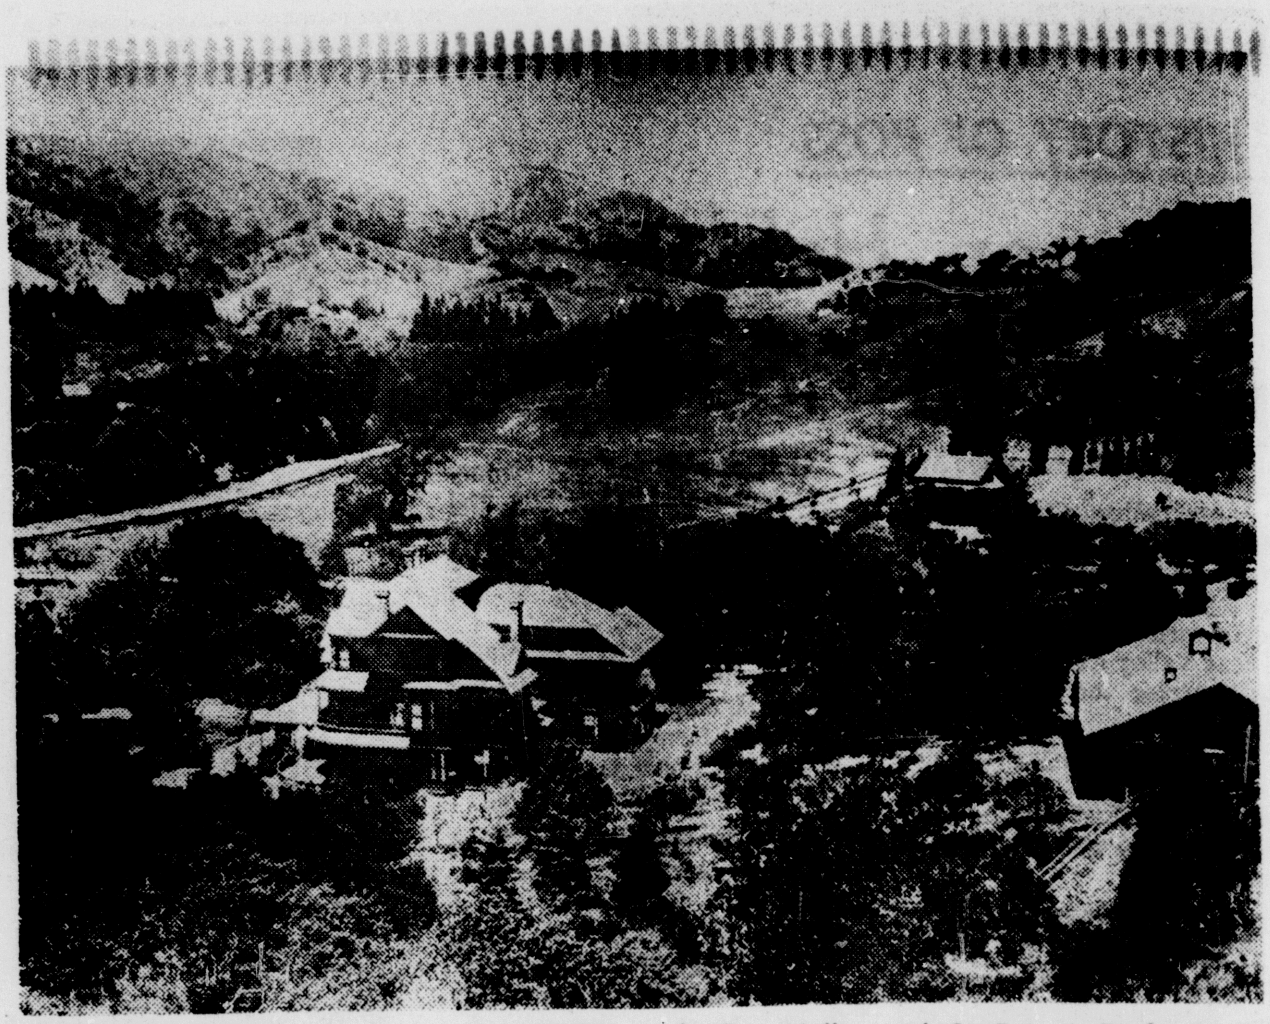
TYPICAL OF Ross' commitment to the preservation of its natural beauty is its strict enforcement of the ordinance against signs.

The tree-lined thoroughfares are called lanes and roads — not streets. Every effort is made to maintain the quiet. The town government operates out of a small but modern town hall.

The 1969 population figures set the number of Ross town residents at 2,768. They are served by fire, police and street departments, a building inspector, a tax office, trustees and a town clerk.

SO ROSS residents have largely succeeded where many others have failed — in retaining the refinements of yesteryear while gaining most of the benefits of contemporary progress.

As San Franciscans say "don't call it Frisco," so Ross residents, particularly the older ones, are likely to say: "Don't call it a city. It's a town. Or the village."



THIS PHOTOGRAPH taken in about 1880 from the approximate point where the Marin Art and Garden Center amphitheater now stands shows the Jonathan Kittle Estate and the Ross Valley with Sir Francis Drake Boulevard and the Kittle barn, now used by the performing Ross Valley Players, also showing.

THE SEAT OF Ross' town government today and the meeting place of its town council is this small but attractive Town Hall in the heart of the quiet, wooded community. Ross became incorporated in August of 1908 after a vote of the male residents. Town services include fire and police departments, a town clerk, a building inspector, a street department and a tax office. (Independent-Journal photo)

CO-AUTHORS OF the newly-published book, "Worlds in the Making," are Maryjane Dunstan, left, and Patricia W. Garlan, above. Miss Dunstan is an instructor in communications at the College of Marin where two years ago she initiated a course called "Inventing the Future" that looks into some of the same problems explored by the book. A Fulbright lecturer in English in Burma from 1958 to 1962, she is the newly-appointed adviser to foreign students at the college in Kentfield. Miss Garlan is a research editor in non-verbal behavior at the Langley Porter Neuropsychiatric Institute in San Francisco and says: "I am uncontrollable with a pencil in my hand." The two women have collaborated previously upon books for children.

A Hopeful Overview Of Mankind's Future

Marin Teacher's Book Explores Some Imaginative Alternatives

Those of us who feel uneasy about what the world will be like 20 years from now may find ideas, insights, challenges and new approaches to the problem of man being "phased-out" of future worlds in a new book, "Worlds in the Making," just published by Prentice-Hall, Inc.

The co-authors, Maryjane Dunstan, chairman of the communications department at College of Marin, and Patricia W. Garlan, a research editor for the Studies in Non-Verbal Behavior at Langley-Porter Neuropsychiatric Institute, call their book "Probes for Students of the Future," And, although prepared for use as a text, it provides provocative reading for all, with pertinent quotes from scores of popular works, and containing everything from Peanuts cartoons to illustrations from Space Odyssey wherever needed to help make a point.

"THIS LOOK AT alternative futures is not the study of utopias or of science fiction. Rather, it is an exploration of the new capabilities and problems spawned by present day science and technology," say the authors.

They believe that unless the disillusionment of today's students can be turned to vision for tomorrow, their pessimism turned to commitment, the future will be bleak, indeed. "The future is," they say, "after all, in their hands."

"It has been suggested that this is a 'bookzine,' more like a magazine than a book, and we encourage people to treat it like a sandwich, biting through its layers," says Miss Dunstan. "We're not interested in continuity and logical thinking, but in cutting across perspectives and getting the imagination to work."

TWENTY STUDIES have been grouped into seven general parts.

Part 1, "Grokking the Problem," emphasizes the point that the rate of change is accelerating rapidly and that the need to cope with change is critical.

Part 2, "Coping with Change," meets the problems and finds ways we can cope with them. The reader is encouraged to try alternative personalities and settings, "trying on a different self-what it is like to be black, for example, or white, if you are black." The aim is to help him to become a more open, adaptable person.

Part 3, "Exploring Spaceship Earth," examines the physical environment and offers some radical approaches for changing it.

PART 4, "THE Machine-Enemy or Ally?," investigates the threat and promise of technology. The reader learns to accept the fears as real, the dangers as controllable and technology as inevitably a factor in the future.

Part 5, "Evolution or Revolution," explores six aspects of the cultural environment which are grouped into three classifications: work-play, communication-transportation, education-evolution. The authors believe that technology must be used to conserve our scarcest resources — the individual's time, energy and living space.

Part 6, "Discovering Human Nature," helps the reader explore what it means to be human; first, by seeing what some people have to say about it and attempting to develop his personal creed; second, by playing with his own constructions, his own experiences of being human.

Part 7, "Inventing the Future," offers a poetic and hopeful overview.

MISS DUNSTAN spent several years researching the book, and signed a contract with the publisher more than two years ago. While researching and gathering data, she initiated a new course at College of Marin, "Inventing the Future," in which students would have an opportunity to study future and alternate worlds via interdisciplinary studies of psychology, anthropology, data processing, communications, science and other fields.

The course has been a tremendous success in terms of interest aroused and in activating the student's concern for the human being in a rapidly changing natural, technological and cultural environment, according to college officials.

English and communications departments in colleges and universities across the country have expressed an interest in the book, and it is expected to become a standard text for courses in these departments. It is available in hardcover, and in paperback at the College of Marin bookstore, and at several Marin retail locations.

Miss Dunstan and Miss Garlan previously have co-authored children's books for Viking Press. "Worlds in the Making" is their first textbook.

ONE OF THE many interests of Nancy White Blunk is horses and horseback riding. Above, her gray kitten playfully swats at flies on the back of the docile mount she has owned since it was a colt. And below, right, she enjoys a gallop home on the horse after a day's work at St. Columba's Church helping prepare for the 1970 Inverness Music Festival. At bottom left, she harvests some of the organically-grown produce that is the result of another of her hobbies, gardening.

Nancy Blunk, Free Spirit

Inve ness Woman Tries To Live The Life Of The 'Complete Artist'

By DON KEOWN

As a school girl living on Guam with her parents Nancy White Blunk experienced a passion to become an architect.

Her inspiration came from the great Richard Joseph Neutra who was a houseguest in her home, who encouraged her ambition and who urged her to attend the University of Hong Kong to study architecture.

But the enthusiasm was a brief and passing one.

"I found out that architecture was not all creative," she recalls. "When I discovered just how much mathematics and engineering were involved, I changed my plans."

Yet Nancy Blunk, Marinite and free spirit, can honestly claim today that in a two year period she has "designed" two complete villages, one Bohemian, the other Italian. And without the math or engineering.

THE VILLAGES were created as backdrops for Inverness Music Festival performances, the Italian setting for last year's "Cavalleria Rusticana" by Mascagni, the just being completed Bohemian hamlet for Smetana's "Bartered Bride" that will be one of the highlights of the 1970 festival opening next Friday night in Inverness.

"The Bartered Bride" will be performed in the outdoor amphitheater of St. Columba's Church on Sunday, Aug. 16, and again on Aug. 23 before the imaginative Czech stage set designed by Mrs. Blunk.

The designing of sets for the festival has become an annual labor of love for Mrs. Blunk.

AND, SHE SAYS, her old distlike for things mathematical is still reflected in her work upon the sets.

"I know I drive the setbuilders to distraction," she says, "but I never work through blueprints. Just sketches, and then a model.

"I'm the same way with the costumes and props. I never use a pattern."

Costumes as well as sets? Indeed, for Mrs. Blunk is deeply involved in virtually all aspects of the Inverness Music Festival that, in its sixth year, has become an established Marin institution and tradition, drawing music-lovers from a wide area to the tranquility and beauty of West Marin.

A BOARD MEMBER since the Inverness Music Festival was formally organized and currently its secretary, Mrs. Blunk functions as organizer and director Fae McNally's good right hand.

She first met McNally in 1965 shortly after his first festival. The meeting took place on the Inverness Firehouse lawn where McNally and some musician friends performed informal concerts of Bach and Schumann music.

One result of that meeting was a resumption by Mrs. Blunk of piano lessons she had abandoned years before.

ANOTHER WAS her involvement with a chorus that presented three performances of Handel's "Messiah" that Christmas, at St. Columba's, at Synanon and at the San Geronimo Presbyterian Church.

Her work with the festival followed, and that became a major interest in 1967 when Jack Mason of Inverness built an amphitheater on the grounds of St. Columba's Church and offered it to McNally and his group for their use.

"The first year," recalls Mrs. Blunk, "we sang the Haydn oratorio 'Creation' using the basic backdrop of redwood shakes that Jack Mason had built. The

IN HER ONE-ROOM home set amidst the hills and trees of Inverness, Nancy White Blunk works in quiet upon some designs for costumes for the upcoming music festival. Now festival secretary as well as a board member, Mrs. Blunk is more than ever involved in the event that has become a tradition with Marin music-lovers.

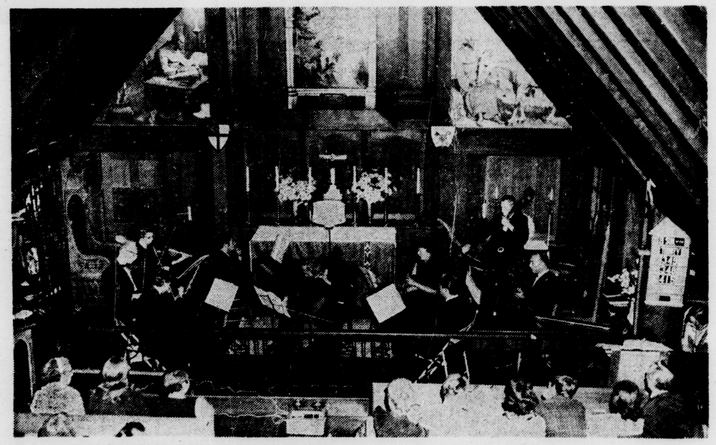
THE EARLIEST Inverness Musical Festival performances outdoors in the St. Columba's Church amphitheater took place in front of the basic redwood shake backdrop provided by Jack Mason who built the outdoor stage.

THE FIRST Inverness Music Festival production in the amphitheater to utilize a Nancy White Blunk-designed backdrop — an Italian village setting — was Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana."



NOT ALL Inverness Music Festival programs take place outdoors. Some are held inside St. Columba's Church, as was this performanec of J. S. Bach's "Musical Offering" in 1966.

Nancy Blunk Is Key Figure In Music Festival

acoustics were fantastic — astonishing!"

THE FOLLOWING year Mrs. Blunk designed a set and built a model for a scheduled performance of Handl's "Samson."

"I still think it is the best that I have done," she says.

But an estimate from a lumber company of the cost of the materials put an end to that project. Instead, "Samson" was presented within the church as a chamber opera without a set — "very beautifully and successfully."

Last year Nancy Blunk got her first real opportunity to see one of her designs in use.

THE EFFORT SHE put into designing and the supervising of the construction by volunteers of the village scene for "Cavalleria Rusticana" was well rewarded by the appreciative reception given it by audience and performers, she says.

This year's Bohemian town of the 1850s where the "Bartered Bride" takes place is a holiday scene that permits Mrs. Blunk to deal generously with color — ribbons, flowers, etc.

"I have even 'planted' a tree at the center of the stage," she says. "Actually, it's a dead tree trunk. But live branches will be attached just before each performance."

HER SET DESIGNS begin, she says, with research for authenticity, the amount required depending upon her prior knowledge of the subject.

And sometimes she runs into a technical problem, such as the thatching of roofs. "After some involved study of how professional thatchers perform their work, I happened to be on the grounds one day when the gardener was weeding. There was a big pile of weeds and grass. And so the idea came: Why not just put down some chicken wire and stuff it with grass and weeds. And you would have a thatched roof.

"And you know, it works quite well!"

MRS. BLUNK laughs: "How organic can you get?"

Nancy Blunk's interest in and appreciation of organic living is a long-held and deeply-felt one.

"I live in the woods, quite removed from town and neighbors," she says.

Nancy White was born 37 years ago in Los Angeles, a second generation Angeleno, both her parents having been born there as well. Her mother was a registered nurse, but practiced very little after the birth of Nancy and younger sisters.

The father was a civil engineer who worked for the city's water and power department, until 1948 when he moved his family to Guam to begin a 15-year career as a civil service engineer, first with the Navy, and then, on Saipan, with the Department of Interior.

AT INTERVALS HE was also associated with the Agency for International Development in American Samoa and in East Africa.

Young Nancy displayed an early talent for music and art, and began studying ballet and piano at 6.

Her progress on the piano was considerable, so that, in her early teens, she was preparing a concerto to audition for a young artists' series with the NBC Orchestra "when I rebelled."

"I didn't realize it, but my confusion and dissatisfaction with the piano stemmed from my total inability to read music," she says.

SOME 20 YEARS later when she became a piano student of Fae McNally, it was "as an absolute beginner as far as reading music was concerned."

Now she teaches a few beginning piano students "and learn more from teaching than they learn from me."

After joining her family on Guam for her high school years, Nancy returned to the mainland to enroll at Palo Verdes College in the Los Angeles area. It was a small, experimental liberal arts school stressing fine arts, psychology and philosophy, with 100 students and 35 instructors.

"ONE COURSE called Laboratory in Art Theory had five students and seven instructors!" she recalls.

There were six graduates when she received her Bachelor of Arts Degree in Human Relations — "mostly taught by a Jungian psychoanlyst" — in 1955. Her studies had also included Comparative Religion — "which began to change my life by interesting me in Oriental culture and philosophy" — plus painting and the dance.

"For a time I had the idea I would join the Martha Graham Studio after graduation, but gradually this hope dimmed."

PART OF THIS period, too, were summer evenings spent watching ballet and listening to concerts in the Hollywood Bowl which, she mentions offhandedly, "was founded by my grandfather."

Following graduation she moved to San Francisco and worked for a year in that city's Japan Town for the Takahashi Trading Co. while her interest and appreciation of things Japanese, including the language, grew. She studied calligraphy, sumic (ink drawing) and the tea ceremony at the Academy of Asian Studies, then directed by Alan Watts.

She met and fell in love with a young potter, John Blunk. They married and moved to Inverness in 1956. The marriage lasted 10 years and produced two sons, Bruno and Rufus, now ages 13 and 11.

BLUNK STILL resides at Inverness and has earned international acclaim as a sculptor. "He has a marvelous talent," says his ex-wife.

During the marriage Nancy helped her husband in designing and building their home from enormous timbers and with great stone retaining walls in an isolated, wooded sector.

She laid out an organic vegetable garden that she boasts "was fabulous." It was set out in a formal design with 48 different kinds of herbs in the borders alone.

"I BAKED ALL the bread — and still do," she says. "I canned and froze hundreds of quarts of fruits and vegetables, made chutneys, vinegars and sparkling apple wines.

"All these things are very dear to me, and I still try to do as much as I can, although my present garden is much smaller."

She confesses to "an almost fanatical sense of order." But adds: "Of course, that is completely justified in the Oriental sense."

AND SHE SAYS she approaches everything "with this feeling of design, whether it be preparing food, keeping house, sweeping the paths and sidewalks, wetting down the garden and corral, selecting my dress."

Simplicity, "almost austerity," is the key to her way of life.

She says she loves to sew clothing, working without a pattern "and often just letting the shape of a piece or scrap of cloth or leather determine the finished product."

"I try not to waste anything," she says.

THIS TRAIT AND her knack for making things she attributes largely to "my creative father" who is now also an Inverness resident and engaged in making "the most incredible log cabin one could imagine."

Another special enthusiasm of Nancy Blunk is horses — "I'm a true nut on horses." At the home she now shares with her two sons who divide their time between their parents she keeps a horse she obtained eight years ago as a colt.

The horse is kept in a corral "about 10 feet from my kitchen window and we sort of talk while I do dishes." And Nancy, even in these busy days of preparation for the music festival, gets in a bit of riding simply by using the horse as her transportation between amphitheater and home. At St. Columba's, the horse grazes in the meadow while Nancy works.

ALONG WITH Fae McNally, Nancy Blunk does the bulk of the less glamorous work in preparation for the festival.

It may include the watering of the lawns or the hand addressing of nearly 2,000 mailers (a 20-hour chore) or the digging of post holes.

"It's the old story," she sighs. "Everyone wants to be a star, but when it comes to digging ditches, Fae and I wind up doing a lot of that. Last year we ended up taking down the set."

There are, however, some volunteers who assist — "I had a lot of good helpers in making the costumes for the soloists." And this year expert cabinetmaker Peter Worsley accepted the responsibility for constructing the set designed by Mrs. Blunk.

"BUT FAE McNALLY is the festival," Nancy insists. "He conceived of it, created it, thinks out every part of it, and keeps it going."

Her greatest fear, she says, is that the over-enthusiasm of some board members for continued growth for the festival might create a climate of high-pressure tactics "in the money-making, publicity-seeking sense."

This year's festival opens Friday night inside St. Columba's church with an 8 o'clock program of piano music for four hands by Fae McNally and Nancy Lyle Bennett.

NEXT SATURDAY at 3 p.m. there will be a program of contemporary music by members of the Mills Performing Group in the amphitheater, and that evening at 8 Margery Tede and Walter Matthes will sing Bartok's "Bluebeard's Castle."

In addition to "Bartered Bride," sung in English, in the amphitheater Sunday, Aug. 16, at 2 p.m., that day's program will also include a concert by the Marin Arts Quartet at 8 p.m. inside the church.

A special festival event on Saturday at noon in the outdoor setting will be a solemn high mass celebrating the Feast of the Assumption, with the San Geronimo Valley Singers directed by Darrell Parker.

THE FESTIVAL concludes Aug. 23 at 2 p.m. with the second performance of "Bartered Bride."

Then, says Nancy Blunk, "I am going to have to find myself some kind of a paying job."

That, for Nancy Blunk, with her strong personal convictions, is no easy undertaking.

"I could probably make a good living as a secretary or something," she says, "but I just can't function as a human being under the conditions in the business world. I would then cease to function as a person, as an artist and as a mother. So I would rather clean house for others. It is something I equate with ditch-digging as honest, 'organic' and useful work by which one can support oneself without guilt."

IN THE MEANTIME she is pleased that her two sons are happy in present circumstances. "They are acutely aware of their great, good luck in their environment," she says. "They are most sensitive to those who do not have these things, and they are most pleased not to live in the city, suburbs or town."

As for herself, Nancy Blunk says "I like to consider myself the complete artist. I like to think that I approach everything I do, including the most menial things, artistically. And I find that the people I feel closest to are the ones who demonstrate this same awareness.

"I have nothing in common with pseudo-artists, the price-oriented, 'arty,' faddists — especially women who I feel are creatively in competition with men as painters and sculptors.

"PERHAPS THIS is why I haven't painted for 15 or more years."

And: "All this may add up to a weird picture. But it's the way I am. And I'm enjoying being me."

WHEN CARPENTERS construct a stage set designed by Nancy White Blunk, they have no blueprints from which to work. But they do have sketches, and a model. Here she is shown with her scale model of her set for the 1970 Inverness Music Festival performances of "The Bartered Bride" in the amphitheater on the St. Columba's Church grounds, Inverness.

The Airlines Pamper Their Passengers

One Veteran Traveler Prejudiced For Planes

By MURRAY J. BROWN
UPI Travel Editor

In this air-oriented age of mass transportation, it is hard to believe that more than 50 per cent of the population of the United States has never flown in a commercial airplane.

It is even more remarkable when you consider that U.S. scheduled airlines reported carrying more than 159 million passengers in 1969. That figure, however, includes repeaters—travelers who made more than one flight—and foreign passengers.

Airlines industry sources have estimated the total of nonflying Americans at about 120 million. Others place it even higher, possibly closer to 65 per cent of the estimated population of 202 million.

IT IS THIS vast untapped market the airlines are depending upon to fill all those seats in the Boeing 747 Superjets and the other big, wide-bodied airliners which will come into service soon.

I have been traveling by plane on business and pleasure for years so probably I am prejudiced. For me, it is not only the fastest way to get where I am going (barring air controller slowdowns and weather or mechanical delays) but part of the fun of getting there.

And the price is right. While virtually everything else increased in cost over the past decade (the government's Consumer Price Index went up 28 per cent between 1959 and 1969), average air fares went down.

THE COMMERCIAL airlines industry is fiercely competitive. With scheduled U.S. domestic and international air fares fixed by agreements among the carriers and governments, each goes all out to outdo its competitors in the battle for the air traveler's dollars.

As a result, travelers by plane are probably among the most pampered passengers ever. Take eating and entertainment, for instance.

All meals are included in the price of the fare, except on certain thrift flights. They range from snacks and sandwiches to full-course meals, including cocktails, champagne, wines and liquors in first class. There is a charge for alcoholic drinks in tourist and economy sections but soft drinks are free.

TRANS WORLD Airlines serves meals on request during "normal" meal periods on its 747 flights. Pan American offers a variety of foreign national dishes on its overseas services while American Airlines gives passengers a choice of U.S. regional specialties on transcontinental hops.

United Airlines has Polynesian meals on its Hawaii runs and Braniff offers Latin American food and drinks on its south-of-the-border services. Eastern Airlines also caters to the "inner man" with selected American and continental dishes.

If notified at least 24 hours in advance, most airlines will provide specially-prepared meals to meet religious, dietary or personal preferences of passengers. Special menus for children also can be arranged in advance. And most planes also carry a supply of baby food.

INTERNATIONAL CUISINE accompanied by choice wines is one of the ways fiercely competitive airlines woo the passengers. The scene here is on board an APSA-Peruvian Airlines plane where the food has been prepared by chief chef Herman Duringer, formerly with the Hotel Crillon in Lima. APSA operates direct flights from Los Angeles to both South American coasts.

TO HELP while away the hours on the longer flights, airlines offer first-run movies and multichannel stereophonic sound systems among other diversions. TWA offers 747 passengers a choice between a restricted and general audience film—and you can pick your seat in a nonsmoking or smoking section, too. Pan American 747s also have sections for smokers and nonsmokers.

Reading and writing materials are provided free, as are games, coloring books, puzzles, etc. to keep the kids amused. Pillows and blankets are furnished free if you get tired of watching the movies, listening to music, reading or writing.

First class passengers usually get hot and cold towels, sleep shades, travel socks and other extras, such as toiletries and pocket-sized comb-and-tooth-brush sets, on long distance flights.

THE FOREIGN airlines also are competing for bigger shares of the American market on international flights with various gimmicks. Japan Air Lines provides first class passengers with happi-coats and soft-soled slippers; Lufthansa rolls out a real keg of beer on trans-Atlantic flights; and Air Jamaica's stewardesses put on a live fashion show way up there in the wild blue yonder.

Smoking: Can Be Harmful To The Pocketbook

Travel tip from Ambassador Tours Stan Pollard:

American cigarettes are expensive abroad, as high as 60 cents to 85 cents a pack. But each person is allowed to take two cartons of cigarettes duty free into most countries. Cigarettes may be purchased tax free aboard planes.

Fishing Off Jamaica For Marlin, Trophies

For fishermen in quest of the big catch, the Caribbean is the place.

And there is no better base from which to operate than the island of Jamaica.

Adding zest to the quest is that Jamaica is the scene of some of the area's most important international fishing tournament.

THE TOURNAMENT season begins in September, and will kick off this year on Sept. 7 when an estimated 200 anglers from the United States, Canada, Europe, Jamaica and other Caribbean points will battle blue marlin and wahoo for the trophies.

The tournaments starting on that date at Port Antonio, an Eden-like fishing mecca on Jamaica's north coast, is really a doubleheader — the eighth annual Blue Marin Team Tournament, and the 12th annual tournament for other game fish that include the sailfish, Allison tuna, wahoo, barracuda, kingfish and others.

This year 70 boats are expected to participate.

AND FISHING is only half the fun. There are receptions in the evenings and other pleasant after-fishing relaxation.

Detailed information can be obtained from International Fishing Tournament, Port Antonio, Jamaica.

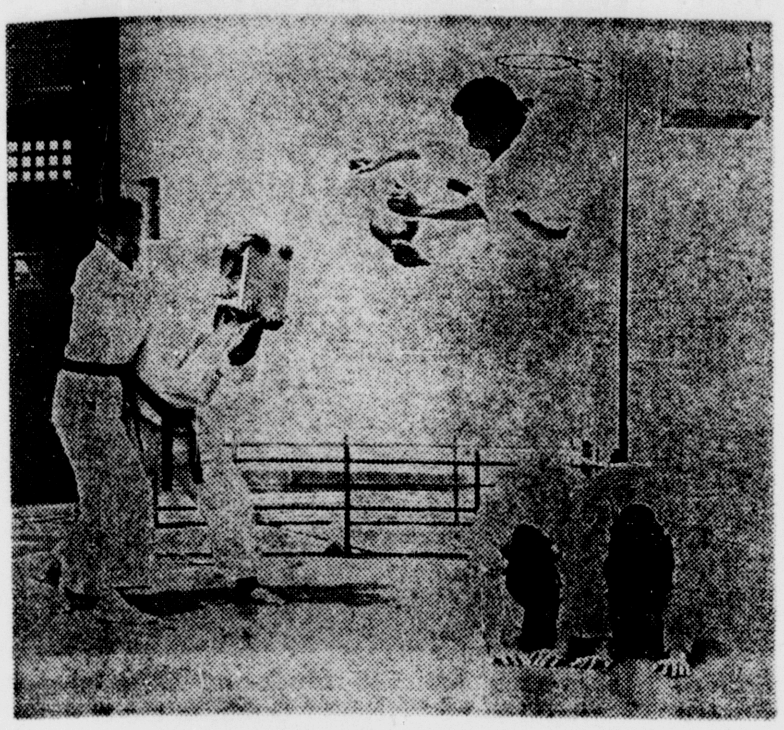
Dining In Other Lands



JAPANESE VILLAGE and Deer Park at Buena Park in Southern California, with attractions that range from the excitement of exhibitions by championship exponents of karate, top, to the serenity of the haunting music of the koto as played by Kimono-clad girls, bottom photo, is billed as "the largest Japanese cultural and recreational center in the Western Hemisphere." It is patterned after the renowned Deer Park at Nara, Japan. There's also a sea theater show with dolphins and sea lions, traditional Japanese dancing, the tea ceremony, garden settings, exotic foods and gifts from the Orient. The park, founded by Allen Parkinson, is open during the summer, through Sept. 13, 9 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. daily except Saturdays when it remains open until midnight. The village first opened in May, 1967, and has expanded rapidly since then.

If you are planning to travel abroad, American Express suggests making dining-out one of the highlights of your trip.

Sampling regional food specialties can be more than a delightful adventure in dining — it can truly enhance your appreciation of the country and its people.

Since the heritage of every country is reflected in its cuisine, familiarity with national dishes and distinctive ways of serving them is one of the things that make travel abroad rewarding. Every country has its traditional delicacies, and in many provincial restaurants the flavor of the region is often captured in the local costumes, folk music and dancing.

AMERICAN Express presents a few tips for becoming an international epicure:

1. Don't hesitate to ask the waiter what the specialties of the house are. Also what wines he recommends to accompany the dishes.
2. Check on the dining hours since they vary from country to country.
3. Don't expect instant service in every case — many dishes are cooked to order.
4. Make it a hobby to "collect" internationally known restaurants or off-beat bistros where ancient traditions flourish.
5. Collect books on foreign foods and wine to add an international flavor to home entertaining and cooking.
6. Shop for colorful table accessories to complement the recipes you may collect along your travels.
7. Do a little reading "homework" on the countries you'll be visiting, their native specialties and dining customs.

AMONG THE stimulating and informative books on the aesthetics of culinary sojourning are the following:

"Massee's Wine-Food Index" by William E. Massee (McGraw-Hill), more than 11,000 entries on famed national and regional dishes, fine wines and restaurants throughout the world; the "Alitalia Book of Authentic Italian Cooking" by Barbara Stacy (Thomas Y. Crowell), over 100 recipes; "Contemporary French Cooking" by Waverly Root and Richard de Rochemont, two well-known journalists and devotees of French cuisine (Random House), more than 400 dishes, hors d'oeuvres to desserts, and glossary of cooking terms; "The Wonder of Food" by K. Cyrus Melikian and Lloyd K. Rudd (Appleton-Century-Crofts).

Of interest to amateur gourmets as well as experts are: "The Fine Art of Chinese Cooking" by Dr. Lee Su Jan (Bobbs Merrill), the philosophy and art of over 22 centuries of Oriental cooking, containing more than 200 recipes and menus adapted to the American kitchen and supermarket; "Menus for Gourmets" by Andre L. Simon (Herbert Jenkins, London); "The Wine Country of France" by Edward Hyams (J. B. Lippincott); "Foreign Dining Dictionary" by Robert Jay Misch (copyright Misch and Browne-Vintners); "Mexico Through My Kitchen Window" by Maria A. de Carbia (Houghton Mifflin); "The SAS World-Wide Restaurant Cookbook" by Charlotte Adams (Random House); "Casserole Cookery" by Pamela Vandyke Price (Herbert Jenkins, London).

A COUPLE ENJOY a gourmet feast in an Amsterdam, Holland, restaurant, complete with fancy lighting for their table.

Robert Nathan's Engrossing Gem

MIA by Robert Nathan; Alfred A. Knopf, 179 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Dorothy Gardiner.

A little gem of a book by a master writer.

Robert Nathan weaves an intriguing tale around an aging novelist, Thomas Baggot, who has retreated to the desolate Cape Cod coast to write his autobiography.

Baggot, saddened that most of his life is in the past, meets Emmeline, a lonely middle-aged spinster who has rented the neighboring house. He also encounters a strange, young girl, Mia, who fascinates and yet puzzles him at the same time.

Gradually, Baggot begins to reawaken to life and the present as he finds himself drawn to the quiet, crippled Emmeline.

Nathan salts his tale with a dash of Salem witchcraft, a mysterious murder, colorful flashbacks into Baggot's fascinating life and vivid descriptions of a New England resort community in the autumn of the year.

The story itself is spellbinding with a surprise ending we won't spoil here.

Nathan uses his skilled pen to pull away the borders of time in "Mia" leaving the reader much to muse over in an era when so great an emphasis is placed on the generation under 30.

Parts of the book rise to allegory and this reviewer can't help but wonder if the book's startling ending isn't really a wry comment from the 76-year-old author on today's schism between young and old.

Nathan, whose earlier works included "Portrait of Jennie" in 1940, "So Love Returns" in 1958 and "A Star in the Wind" in 1962, has in "Mia" created an engrossing little book that leaves much to mull over long after it is returned to the library shelf.

THESE PHOTOGRAPHS, a preening pelican at left, and trio of baby bluejays at right, are by Leonard Lee Rue III and are included among the 140 black-and-white photographs in his "Pictorial Guide to the Birds of North America," published by Thomas Y. Crowell.

A Treat For The Birdlovers: The Scientific Data Plus Lore

PICTORIAL GUIDE TO THE BIRDS OF NORTH AMERICA by Leonard Lee Rue III; Crowell, 368 pages, $12.50. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Leonard Lee Rue III, naturalist, writer and photographer who did "Pictorial Guide to the Mammals of North America" earlier, has followed that success with this treat for birdlovers.

It is not to be confused with the pocket-sized manuals you can carry into the field and use in identifying quickly the feathered creatures you encounter along the way.

In the first place, the book is too hefty for that. In the second, since it includes a sampling of the species found over an entire continent, it is not complete enough regionally to cover all the varied California bird population. Finally, except for a "quick identification" color spectrum at the front of the book, the illustrations are not in color. And color sketches or photos are almost essential for the amateur attempting to separate the various look-alike species.

But what Rue has given us is a wonderful book for armchair enjoyment.

For more than 80 species, we are given the basic scientific descriptions and backgrounds. But more than that, Rue passes along a rich store of information and lore he has accumulated from his own personal experiences and observations. This is enhanced immeasurably by Rue's appealing writing style, denoting a true affection for birds and an enthusiasm for spreading that understanding.

Thus we are informed upon the courting habits of the red-winged blackbird, learn that the Baltimore oriole builds a stout nest capable of supporting nearly 18 pounds of lead weights, that the aggressive little house sparrow is largely responsible for the virtual disappearance of the bluebird, that the pelican so long regarded by fishermen as a rival and foe actually consumes almost entirely trash fish disdained by man, that poultry and game birds make up less than 2 per cent of the diet of the red-shouldered hawk who consumes immense quantities of harmful rodents, that the house sparrow will fight its own reflection in glass not just for hours for months, that the Arctic tern is especially valorous in defense of its nest and young, that the elimination of its prairie dog host has also brought about a decline in the numbers of burrowing owls, that the early-bird robin does, indeed, catch the worm, that the yellow-shafted flicker simply sticks out his tongue and allows ants to attack it and then slurps them up, that a parent glacous-winged gull will kill the chick of another if it chances into his territory, and much, much more.

The many photographs, taken by Rue, are splendid candid studies, many of them rare close-ups, that more than compensate for the missing color, disappointing as this lack is in a bird book.

"Pictorial Guide to the Birds of North America" is also a guide to continuing reading pleasure.

Henry Ford II Offers Ideas On Problems

THE HUMAN ENVIRONMENT AND BUSINESS by Henry Ford II; Weybright and Talley, 63 pages, $3.50. Reviewed by Harry Craft.

The author, a shrewed businessman and the head of one of America's foremost automobile manufacturers, has combined into one volume three of his short talks before Vanderbilt University, the Yale Students' Political Union and the Harvard Business School entitled "The Individual and the Establishment"; "Social Conscience and Profit"; and "Business, the Environment and the Quality of Life." Each deals with a slightly different aspect of the present social rebellion and its relationship to business.

In his first chapter, Ford takes a hard and realistic look at young people and other rebellious groups. He outlines the recourses they have in reshaping the world to give them more personal freedom, and the accompanying pitfalls.

"Social Conscience and Profit" suggests separating the responsibilities of government and business in solving underprivileged and minority group problems — with business undertaking to provide more and better jobs and higher incomes for no other motivating reasons than its own self-interest and profit. But Ford believes business is far less qualified to improve family life, raise educational standards or administer justice and should stay out of these fields, leaving them to political, educational and social agencies.

In "Business, the Environment and Quality of Life" he again emphasizes the profit motive of business giving people what they want in environmental improvements and in respecting public changes in values and expectations, carrying some of his projections into the future.

Ford's arguments are almost mathematically expressed and show a deep understanding of controversial issues.

Advice For The Short

HOW TO INCREASE YOUR HEIGHT by Dr. Charles W. Linart and August Blake; Arco, 89 pages, $3.95. Reviewed by Maxine Keown.

This small book by an orthopedic surgeon and a guidance counselor on how to become taller is actually a manual on the development of better posture. And that, it develops, is Dr. Linart's secret on how you can add inches to your height.

The book is devoted largely to some simple exercises — almost too simple, it seems — aimed at straightening the stance, with some advice on posture habits and nutrition thrown in. New vigor and fewer aches are promised as by-products.

The program certainly is not going to produce any miracles, but might very well be of some limited help to the person self-conscious about being short or stooped — particularly the latter.

Anthology Suffers From Familiarity

THE ENDS OF TIME edited by Robert Silverberg; Hawthorn Books, 225 pages, $5.95. Reviewed by Wayne Ratliff.

Anthologist-author Robert Silverberg, in his introduction to this volume of eight short stories, accurately describes the collection as follows:

"It is science fiction about the far future, a kind of science fiction that is prophetic only in a visionary way. It does not spring from an analysis of trends so much as it does from dreams and fantasies."

This seems a good basis for a new anthology; the great bulk of science fiction is based on extrapolations of current trends in society, and science fiction short story buffs require little excuse for an anthology.

It does not, however, seem reason enough to collect stories already anthologized in hardcover, as four of the eight have been. One story, "The Awakening," by Arthur C. Clarke has been anthologized twice since 1955 in hardcover.

We have not read nearly enough science fiction in recent years to stay current in the field, yet we had read each story in the collection previously. It seems likely that some of the stories have seen too many magazine and paperback reprints to be included in the anthology.

A few of the stories were worth re-reading, and all of them rated a first reading.

Two short stories by Fritz Leiber, "Last" and "When the Last Gods Die," and one by the anthologist, "At the End of Days," are included in the collection.

Other stories included are "Alpha Ralpha Boulevard" by Cordwainer Smith, "Twilight" by John W. Campbell Jr., "Epilogue" by Poul Anderson and "Guyal of Sfere" by Jack Vance.

"Twilight" was published originally under a Campbell pseudonym, Don A. Stuart. Jack Vance is better known as Henry Kuttner.

Hardcover collections printed since 1955 in which stories in this anthology appear include "Time and The Stars;" "The Best from F and SF," 11th Series; "Reach for Tomorrow;" "Prelude to Mars" and "Beyond Tomorrow."

A Vendetta Is Charged Against The Bureaucrats Of The FDA

By DON KEOWN

THE DICTOCRATS: Our Unelected Rulers, by Omar V. Garrison; Specialty Features Syndicated, 333 pages, softcover, $1.25.

Obtusely entitled "The Dictocrats," muck-raker Omar V. Garrison's latest paperback expose also has been somewhat mislabeled by its publisher, who describes it on the cover thusly:

"A veteran reporter uncovers some startling shenanigans in our federal offices . . . "

Rather than shenanigans, it deals largely with stupidity and stubborn vindictiveness.

And Garrison's target is not all federal offices but almost exclusively the Food and Drug Administration.

But as much as the book is an attack upon the FDA, it is equally a defense of the controversial health food industry and unorthodox nutritionists.

Garrison's theme is that the FDA has carried on a relentless and unreasoning vendetta against the health food trade and against those lecturers and writers with whose nutrition theories it does not agree, while neglecting its other responsibilities of far greater public significance.

On page 169 he puts his case this way:

"The danger to the public lies not in harmless home remedies sold in health food stores. It lies rather in the large armamentarium of powerful prescription drugs about the proper use and total effects of which there is an acknowledged and widespread ignorance among the medical profession.

"Nothing ever recommended or sold by a health lecturer ever produced a piteous and heart-rending legion of deformed bodies as did thalidomide. No autotherapy employing vitamins and minerals ever resulted in fatal aplastic anemia as did doctor-prescribed chloramphenicol. No self-treatment with soybeans, lecithin, honey or rose hips ever caused serious kidney damage as have sulfanilomide and streptomycin."

The FDA, Garrison notes, continually explains its failures to perform its most critical functions — the thorough testing of new drugs and the control of tainted foods — by referring to its shortage of manpower.

Bluntly, Garrison suggests the agency re-direct some of the effort it now expends on prosecuting — or persecuting — with great publicity health food manufacturers and retailers, or lecturers expounding nutritional theories that do not comply with the official line that the normal American diet is adequate, toward its more vital and more pressing responsibilities.

To the reply that health foods and supplements might prevent the ailing from seeking urgently needed professional medical help, Garrison notes that there are other factors working to that same effect that are tolerated. Aspirins in the medicine cabinet, booze to relieve aches and tensions, religious beliefs, the too often exorbitant costs of medical care and medicines — is the government going to wage war on these as well?

As for the FDA's concern over money allegedly wasted by the public upon food supplements, Garrison asks: "When did it become the function of the government to tell us how to spend our money as long as what we buy is not injurious to us or others?"

If we are going to eliminate all wasteful expenditures, he might well have added, shouldn't we include the salaries of any number of bureaucrats who serve no useful purpose? How about cigarettes? Frivolity?

Besides, says Garrison, the case against what the FDA likes to call "nutritional nonsense" is by no means as clearcut as the bureaucrats, the American Medical Association, the food processors and their allies in science would like to have us believe.

There is, Garrison points out, a substantial, if minority, opinion, including a few within the AMA and many within science, that supports the belief that the American diet is seriously deficient, and that supplementary foods, vitamins and minerals are not only harmless but decidedly helpful.

Belatedly, he adds, the Establishment is coming to adopt, in whole or part, many of these minority stands.

Thus we have the sudden "discovery" that malnutrition is indeed widespread in this affluent land. Tardily, we have governmental concern expressed over the effects of DDT and other pesticides. The advantages of polyunsaturated fats over saturated fats win new supporters. A furor results when an expert witness testifies that most of our dry cereals do consist, as the non-conforming nutritionists have long insisted, of calories left bereft of effective vitamins and minerals by overprocessing.

Garrison suggests that eventually many of these bureaucrats and their supporters who have pooh-poohed the superiority of honey to granulated sugar or of natural vitamins to synthetic vitamins will come around to embracing these ideas, too. Or, more likely, "discover" them as their own.

There is no indication that Garrison wrote his book under commission from the health food industry. But if he had done so, it is unlikely he could have done a better job for them.

Admittedly, it is a one-sided presentation, written with considerable alarm and scorn by a man who first took on the bureaucrats in an earlier book, "Spy Government." But it is also an effective presentation. Garrison would not have been able to land so many of the blows in his barrage if the FDA had not made of itself such an inviting target with its high-handed, big-brother-knows-best, hold-tight-to-the-status-quo approach to its responsibilities.

Garrison makes a valid point when he states that the Food and Drug Administration, as well as other federal regulatory agencies, were never intended to function as combination executive, legislative and judicial bodies plus censors and police, but only to oversee the execution of policies formulated by our elected officials.

He is on solid ground, too, when he asserts that the FDA and others should set aside their preoccupation with their own personal prejudices and their hunt for easy scapegoats and come to grips with the real perils to the public.

Just as the Federal Bureau of Investigation, belatedly, has finally begun to move against the real criminal menace, the Syndicate, so the Food and Drug Administration should turn its attention to the poisons that have been slipping through in products within its jurisdiction.

Americans, it would seem, are sufficiently mature to make their own choice between Post Toasties and wheat germ, between white and whole grain breads, between sugar and honey, between added vitamins and no supplements. They are, however, in no position to make that judgment when it comes to medicines, to additives in our foods and to the purity of the processing and packaging of our meats ond other edibles.

THE NEWEST book by Margot Patterson Doss, "The Bay Area at Your Feet" (Chronicle Books, $2.95, softcover), makes pleasant reading and no doubt even more pleasant strolling.

Mrs. Doss suggests 43 walks of special interest on the Peninsula and the North and East Bay areas, providing the historical and background information that will enrich those small adventures.

It is in the pattern of her earlier "San Francisco at Your Feet," "Golden Gate Park at Your Feet" and "Walks for Children in San Francisco," and of her newspaper articles that are among the best things to appear in the San Francisco Chronicle. With a most successful formula, Mrs. Doss, quite wisely, has decided not to tamper with it. And it works very well for her, once again.

A considerable number of Marin walks have been included — in the Point Reyes National Seashore, in Bolinas and along its lagoon, along the San Andreas Fault in Bear Valley, at Tomales Bay, around Bon Tempe Lake, in Sausalito and in Tiburon and Belvedere.

The illustrations, while well reproduced, are unexceptional in their selection. But it is Mrs. Doss' text that counts. And there, she has used her limited space most effectively in choosing just the kind of information that deepens one's appreciation of the places and people that make the Bay Area such a fascinating place for walking — and for living.

THE UNIVERSITY of Glasgow teacher of logic Robert H. Thouless wrote his "Straight and Crooked Thinking" back in the 1930s. Now, probably with the straight thought in mind that there is now a greater need for logic than ever, Hart Publishing Co. has reprinted it as a $1.95 paperback under the title "How to Think Straight." The theme is don't let emotion twist logic. Thirty-four dishonest tricks commonly used in argument are analyzed, but it seems to us the ones with whom we disagree utilize many more. As for our side of those arguments — why, pure straight-thinking, of course.

INTEREST IN astrology apparently continues unabated, and, indeed, seems on the upswing, as witnessed by a spate of books upon the subject. For addicts, "Astrology For the Aquarian Age" (Simon and Schuster, $7.95) by Alexandra Mark, is offered as THE do-it-yourself manual. The writer, wife of a Boston neurosurgeon, is a leading light in astrological circles. Her book is intended to equip the reader to draft his own astrological chart "based on his own biological clock." It's strictly for believers, which we are not. But a big, glossy and, we'll admit, persuasive book.

A NEW collection of Bill Keane's "Family Circus" comic strips, this one entitled "Wanna Be Smiled At?", has been published as a 50-cent paperback by Fawcett Publications. Followers of the fun-filled family cartoon in the Independent-Journal will be interested.

DEADLY PATTERN by Douglas Clark; Stein and Day, 169 pages, $4.95. Reviewed by Don Keown.

Fans of the classic English puzzle mystery can rejoice in Douglas Clark, for he writes in that tradition, and writes well.

"Deadly Pattern" is his third Detective Chief Inspector George Masters novel. This time Masters and his Scotland Yard team are summoned to a seacoast resort area where the bodies of four respectable married women have been found buried in the sand. A fifth such woman is missing. Using his brain, rather than the brawn that predominates in most of today's crime fiction, Masters first locates the fifth corpse, then unmasks the multiple killer.

The deduction is excellent, as are the setting and the characters. The abrasive relationship of Masters to his next-in-command adds a special fillup of interest.

THE KILL DOG by Jonathan George; Doubleday, 204 pages, $4.50. Reviewed by Don Keown.

The place and time for "The Killdog" are Czechoslovakia and the late summer of 1968 — a period of political crisis and eventually of the Russian take-over.

Jonathan George, a pseudonym for a British novelist, has, we are told, based his novel upon the actual experience of a Czech refugee.

Prof. Jan Melisek, anthropologist and outspoken foe of party oppression, has fled Prague, and is aided by a young English woman, Maggie Armitage, in crossing into Austria and freedom. Romance develops between the professor and Maggie. But Belisek finds he must return to Czechoslovakia, despite the danger, to solve a riddle he left unresolved. Maggie goes with him. And ultimately they must also work out a resolution to their own relationship that recognizes political realities. Better than average.

Leontyne Price As 'Tosca' Heroine, And An Intellectual 'Dr. Faust'

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—Leontyne Price seems well on the way to being as fully recorded a prima donna as Renata Tebaldi and Joan Sutherland. She has been heroine of many of RCA's recorded operas, and here she is as heroine of a "Tosca" by RCA's competitor, London.

It is a curious recording, with three aging singers in the principal male roles —Guiseppe DiStefano, Giuseppe Taddei, and Fernando Corena. None enjoys a former vocal estate but all are adequate as stimuli and props for Miss Prince's stunning flight over Tosca's vocal trajectory.

Evidently the recording was made in 1967 or before and only now is being released in the United States, perhaps due to a contractural release covering the use of Miss Price. The chorus and orchestra were that of the Vienna State Opera and the conductor was Herbert Von Karajan who de-Italianized the score to the degree of taking some tension out of it (London-1284).

AFTER FIRST reading the libretto and then hearing a recording of Ferruccio Busoni's opera "Doctor Faust" you will understand why he has a small coterie of awed admirers but no real following among contemporary patrons of music.

It's his libretto and his telling of the Faust legend is poetical but fantastic and laden with philosphical implications. Intellectualism gets little house in music now and evidently didn't in Busoni's time. "Doctor Faust" has never made the grade as a repertory opera. Its score has weight, at times a Bachian weight, at others just heaviness.

It was made by German singers and a German chorus and orchestra under Ferdinand Leitner. Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau took the part of Faust and Karl Christian Kohn sang Mephistopheles, both most satisfactorily. It was a studio performance, of course. This is not an opera house opera (Deutsche Grammophon 2709032.).

THE LATE Arturo Toscanini tried often to popularize Respighi, and here is Leonard Bernstein taking up the chore. with "The Pines of Rome" and "Roman Festivals." His orchestra was the New York Philharmonic (Columbia-7448). The reviewer was enthralled with the tape version of Erich Leinsdorf's enhancing interpretations of parts of the "Tannhauser" score and the suite from "Der Rosenkavalier" (London-Ampex 75037).

Pop Records—A Bobby Vinton

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER

NEW YORK (UPI)—Bobby Vinton began his career as an instrumentalist and band leader but switched to singing on a whim.

Vinton told UPI in an interview several years ago that the singer in the band he was leading was making more money than he was.

"He wasn't a very good vocalist," Vinton said. "I couldn't sing either but I thought I could do better than he was doing."

Vinton got off to a good start for a beginner and soon had made a name for himself among the new singers.

Now, several years later, Vinton returns to instrumental music on an album, "Sounds of Love" (Epic BN 26542).

Vinton does not attempt to dominate the music, thus his saxophone interludes are modest but more than adequate.

All the numbers are in slow tempo, giving the Vinton sax the romantic effect he intended to achieve. Among them are "Raindrops Keep Fallin' On My Head," "I'll Never Fall in Love Again," "A Taste of Honey," "I Will Wait for You" and "Somewhere, My Love."

Other pleasant instrumentals may be heard on "Raindrops Keep Fallin' on My Head and other Academy Award Winners" (RCA Camden CAS-2411) by Living Strings, Living Bras, Living Jazz and the Melachrino Strings and Orchestra. Numbers include "Sweet Leilani," "Never on Sunday," "It Might As Well Be Spring," "The Last Time I Saw Paris" and "Call Me Irresponsible." Bob Armstrong, Mel Davis and Malcolm Dodds are also featured.

SELECTED SINGLES

"Groovy Situation" by Gene Chandler (Mercury 73083), "I Want to Take You Higher" by Sylvanus (Uni 55235), "Togetherness" by Buck Owens and Susan Raye (Capitol 2791), "Close To You" by Carpenters (A&M 1183), "Doomsday Afternoon" by Earth Island (Philips 40673),

TAPE DECK

"Empty Rooms" by John Mayall (Polydor 4010), an Ampex tape release, is full of good sound. Mayall seems to be ever present either on vocals, guitar, moog or harmonica but he receives excellent support from Johnny Almond on reeds and flutes, Jon Mark on 12 string guitars and Steve Thompson and Larry Taylor on bass guitars. Mayall is involved creatively in all 12 compositions.

SOME NEW READING FOR THE JUNIORS

The very title of "Pumpernick and Pimpernell" (Doubleday, $4.50) by Lilo Fromm, award-winning German author and artist, sounds a promise of fun for the 8-year-olds and younger.

It's a rollicking tale of two gardeners, the title characters, whose peaceful existence is disturbed by a sudden deluge of strange and unwelcome visitors.

The two eventually outwit the invaders, and then with the help of their dog, Pudding, take precautions to avert any more such intrusions.

The story is unusual and imaginative, and so is the very colorful artwork, somehow reminiscent of Black Forest and the Brothers Grimm characters and moods — all very European.

Some other new books for the juniors:

Marguerite de Angeli has been writing and illustrating books for children since 1935 and has an impressive list of classics and near classics to her credit. One of her finest is "Up the Hill" which was published in 1942 and has now been reissued (Doubleday, $3.95). It is a tale loaded with old-fashioned charm about a Polish family in a Pennsylvania mining town at Christmas time, maintaining the customs of their old country even as they learn about those of people from other distant lands and adapt to the ones of their new home. Warmly told and beautifully illustrated.

Joan Aiken, daughter of Conrad Aiken, has carved out a successful career of her own as a writer, specializing in children's fiction. "Smoke From Cromwell's Time" (Doubleday, $3.95) is a third collection of her stories for 12-year-olds and up, with the emphasis upon magic and miracles. The result is a varied assortment of nicely-told pleasers for young fantasy fans.

Robert B. Jackson, a veteran writer of books about automobiles and auto racing, tells the story of the Indianapolis Speedway and its 500-mile Memorial Day classic in his "Championship Trail" (Walck, $3.75). However, it is not a history of that event, but rather a chronicle of a single season with car owners, drivers, mechanics and others involved in the sport pointing toward Indianapolis where their efforts all come to a climax. The year is 1968. Jackson's writing does not strike sparks, but is adequate. Action and character study photographs, splendidly reproduced, illustrate the book.

"Turn Back For a Glove?" (Walck, $4.50) is a collection of poems by Gregory Harrison with a contemporary ring that might well strike a chord with young readers. The subject matter is varied — nature, a river, a diesel train, a castle, a motorcyclist, the gray squirrel, a TV documentary, etc. Sometimes the mood is peaceful. And sometimes it is anything but peaceful. Most young people today take their poetry set to music. Harrison's seems more for recitation. But it is undeniably effective.

Tips on Purchase and Home Care of Your Wardrobe

MARIN CLEANERS Phone 454-4792—Member N.I.D. of San Rafael, Bel Aire & Fairfax

"What Spotted My Knit Dress?"

As you indicate, your dress was not cleaned by a professional. It was cleaned in a coin operation. The process involved in such cleaning is the cause of the "spots" or color loss in your knit dress. The miss-use of a pre-spotter on especially soiled portions, before cleaning, is the cause. Pre-spotters have definite place in cleaning badly soiled garments; but the one using the spotter should know dyes and colors or just be lucky on certain garments.

In the situation with your knit dress, overgenerous use of a pre-spotter, immediate cleaning and failure to follow pre-spotting instructions, caused the color change in the pre-spotted areas. May I suggest that professional care would have avoided your trouble?

Versatility Of Vines Includes Their Use For Climate Control

There are many vines that, trellised, espaliered or grown upon a fence or wall, contribute spectacular beauty to the landscape with their magnificent bloom and appealing foliage.

Vines will also serve as a privacy screen for your outdoor living areas. And reduce the glare of sunlight upon a patio or terrace, an attribute that is appreciated particularly during the summer months.

AND AS A source of shade, they serve effectively as well as a means of climate control.

Darker foilaged vines tend to absorb heat, while lighter foliaged varieties reflect it. The most obvious use in controlling climate is a trellis, arbor or in natural growth where the vines reduce the amount of sunlight reaching a given area.

Marin gardeners have a host of evergreen and deciduous vines to choose from. The latter shed leaves in winter which permits the sunshine to pour through.

YOUR NEARBY nurseryman has a collection of both types — and more important, he will have the varieties proven to be reliable in your area.

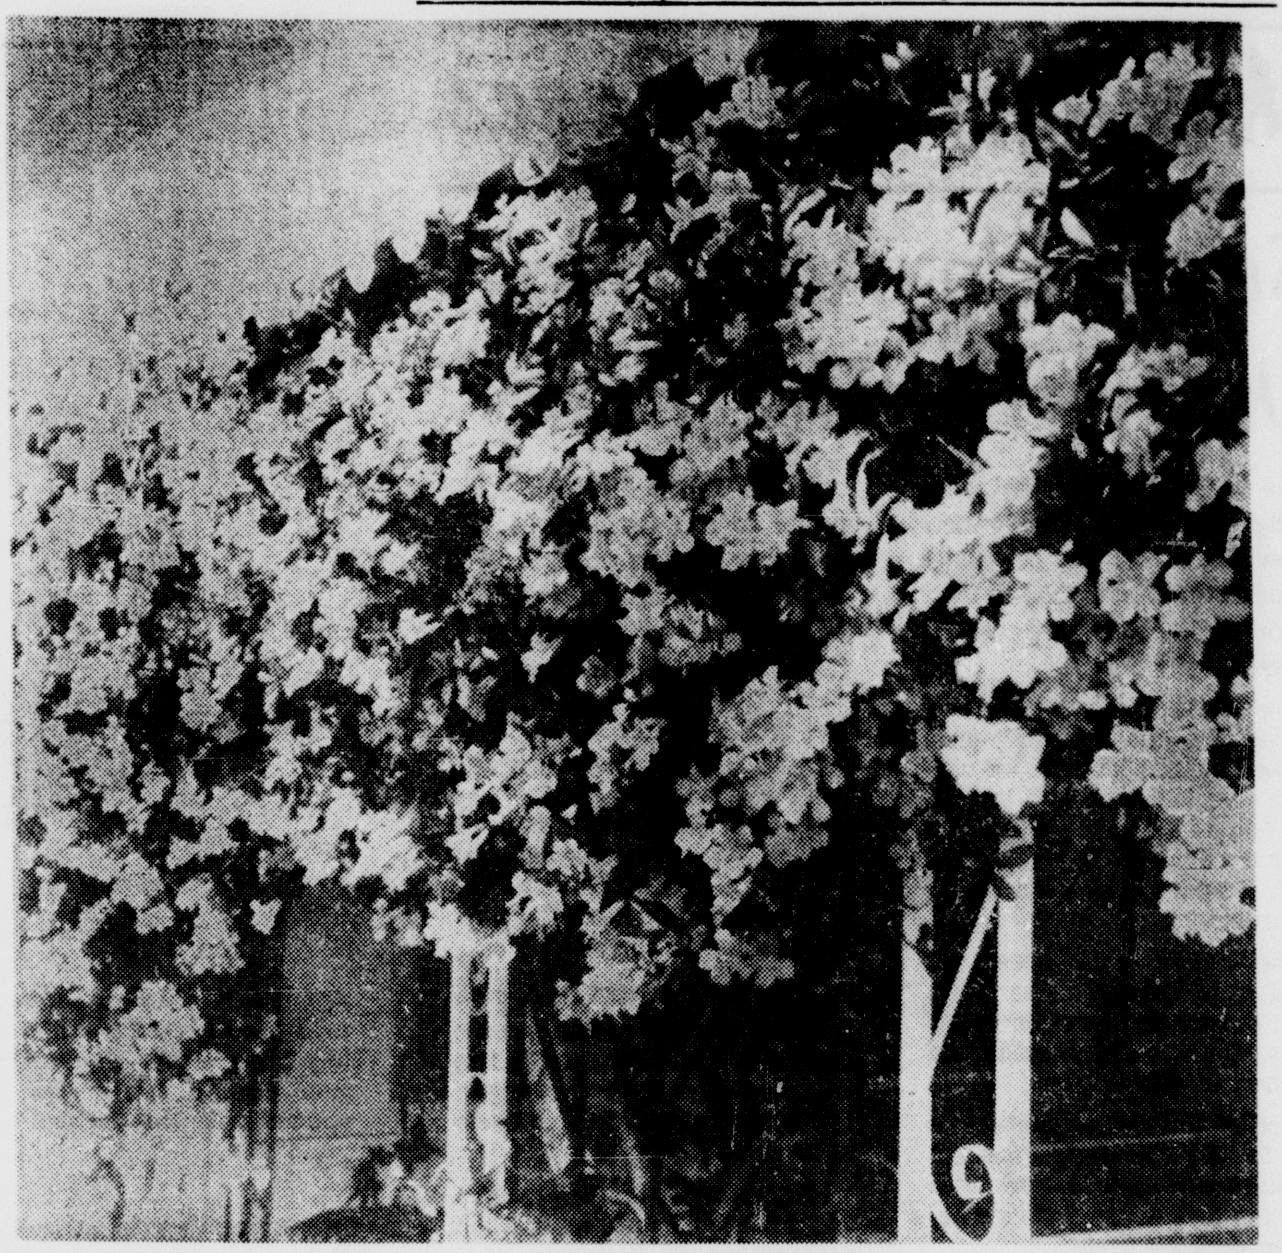
One of the most popular all-purpose vines is Star Jasmine. It has fragrant white flowers which adorn rich, dark green foliage. Use it on a trellis or against a wall — or as a spreading ground cover plant.

Countless yellow blooms and lacy, light green foliage highlight the Carolina Jessamine which is a logical choice for arbor or trellis. Against a redwood fence, the color combination is handsome.

Lavender Trumpet Vine is another attractive choice. And Bougainvillea is still another.

IN OUR COASTAL gardens where winter temperatures aren't at all severe, such spectacular-bloomers as Passion Vine, Burmese Honeysuckle, and Handevilla (Chile Jasmine) are used extensively for beauty and climate control. Inland, plant them in a protected spot.

If you're not familiar with all of the vines mentioned, visit your nursery and get acquainted with them — they're as lovely as the names are intriguing. Shopping may reveal a choice of Clematis vines, Wisteria and Virginia Creeper. These are vines Grandma used to grow. They are every bit as beautiful and dependable today.



THE SPECTACULAR Lavender Trumpet Vine serves splendidly as an example of the versatility of vines. Along with a dazzling display of summer-time blooms, it also provides you with air conditioning when you need it most. Note how the vine has been trained to break the glare of the sun and shade occupants of the porch. (Photo courtesy of California Association of Nurserymen)

When Trees Turn Pale

Iron needed for production of chlorophyll may be lacking if your trees appear to be pale green this summer.

Many trees suffer from "chlorosis," that may be caused by concrete. Building concrete, hunks of sidewalk and driveway, cinder and old bricks buried two-to-three feet below a lawn can inhibit shade tree development, experts tell us.

These materials generally are buried as fill when a house is built. The debris may harm trees gradually. As it decomposes, the dissolved materials move upward in the soil, often causing excessive alkalinity in locking up the iron normally available in soil.

Copper, zinc, boron, or phosphorous, also necessary elements, may be tied up the same way. The lack of iron and inadequate chlorophyll checks tree growth and food reserves.

A well-balanced feeding with the necessary elements will help.

A CHECKLIST FOR GARDENERS OF MARIN

Here is the Marin gardener's checklist for the coming week:

✔Take long stems when you cut your roses to renew the established bush. Feed roses if it has been a month since the last time. This will promote fall bloom.

✔Quick color can be found this month from lantanas. Give them the sunniest exposure you have.

✔If you need a handsome parkway covering, try Aaron's beard (Hypericum calysinum). In summer it is a mass of bright yellow blooms.

✔Most of us remember to water our lawns in summer. But do you remember to feed your lawn as well? It's important.

✔This is an ideal time to plant citrus trees, both standard and dwarf size, for fruit and fragrance.

✔If you water frequently, you are creating the kind of environment in which snails and slugs thrive. So keep your bait replenished to control these avaracious pests.

The Natives Are Accustomed To California's Long, Dry Summers

Native California shrubs, being used to our long, dry summers, have built-in resistance to drought which keeps them looking hale and hearty even with neglect.

When planted in the garden, especially on dry slopes and hillsides, they keep up appearances where other plants may not.

This does not imply that natives are to be used in the garden only when poor conditions exist. Many natives have also learned to live with normal garden conditions.

IF YOU WOULD enjoy the beautiful benefits from them, August is a good time to plant natives, says the California Association of Nurserymen.

Most widely adapted to garden use are several members of the Ceanothus family — the "wild lilacs" seen from San Diego northward. Our own Point Reyes Ceanothus hugs the ground and creates a carpet of rich green. Lavender blue flowers are a springtime sensation.

Carmel Creeper is another Ceanothus ground cover. It has larger leaves that form a mounding cover up to two feet or more in height.

OTHER CEANOTHUS varieties are more shrub-like. Their handsome foliage and blue-lilac-like flowers look natural in the far reaches of the garden.

Varieties to consider are such hybrids as Mountain Haze, a six footer which bursts forth with a blanket of light blue flowers each spring; Sierra Blue, a larger shrub in size and bloom; and Julia Phelps, with deeper blue blossoms.

Check your nurseryman's selection to see what enjoyment is in store for you.

WHEN NOT IN berry, the Toyon (California Christmas Berry) is a fine shrub that fits into today's landscapes where a large-growing specimen is required. Its winter crop of red berries is beyond description.

The big, sturdy Fremontia, with dazzling yellow-to-gold blooms, has been a favorite for years. Plantsmen have recently introduced hybrids that will tolerate garden conditions and withstand some pampering.

Fremontia is best where it doesn't get extra attention, such as frequent waterings. Like all natives, they are undemanding, durable and most natural in a California garden.

Sunshade Adds Flair, Utility To The Patio

As the warm months move along, even new home owners know where they can best place a sunscreen in the yard to filter glare and catch any cooling breezes.

Consider a garden shelter consisting of a small lounging deck, backed by an open port for children's vehicles and toys or folding chairs. Topped with a spaced and tilted sunscreen roof, it's sure to prove a family favorite.

The family work crew will need little more than hammer, saw, square and level for tools; nails, some bolts, cement and lumber, of course.

Size of this deck-sunscreen is up to the builder. Four-foot modules are easy to work with figuring that as the distance between deck stringers.

BEAMS FOR THE sunshade may be slightly longer than the deck's width to allow for the slope, and also extend back to cover the storage area.

Finishes Optional

Finishes are optional and not required on some wood sidings.

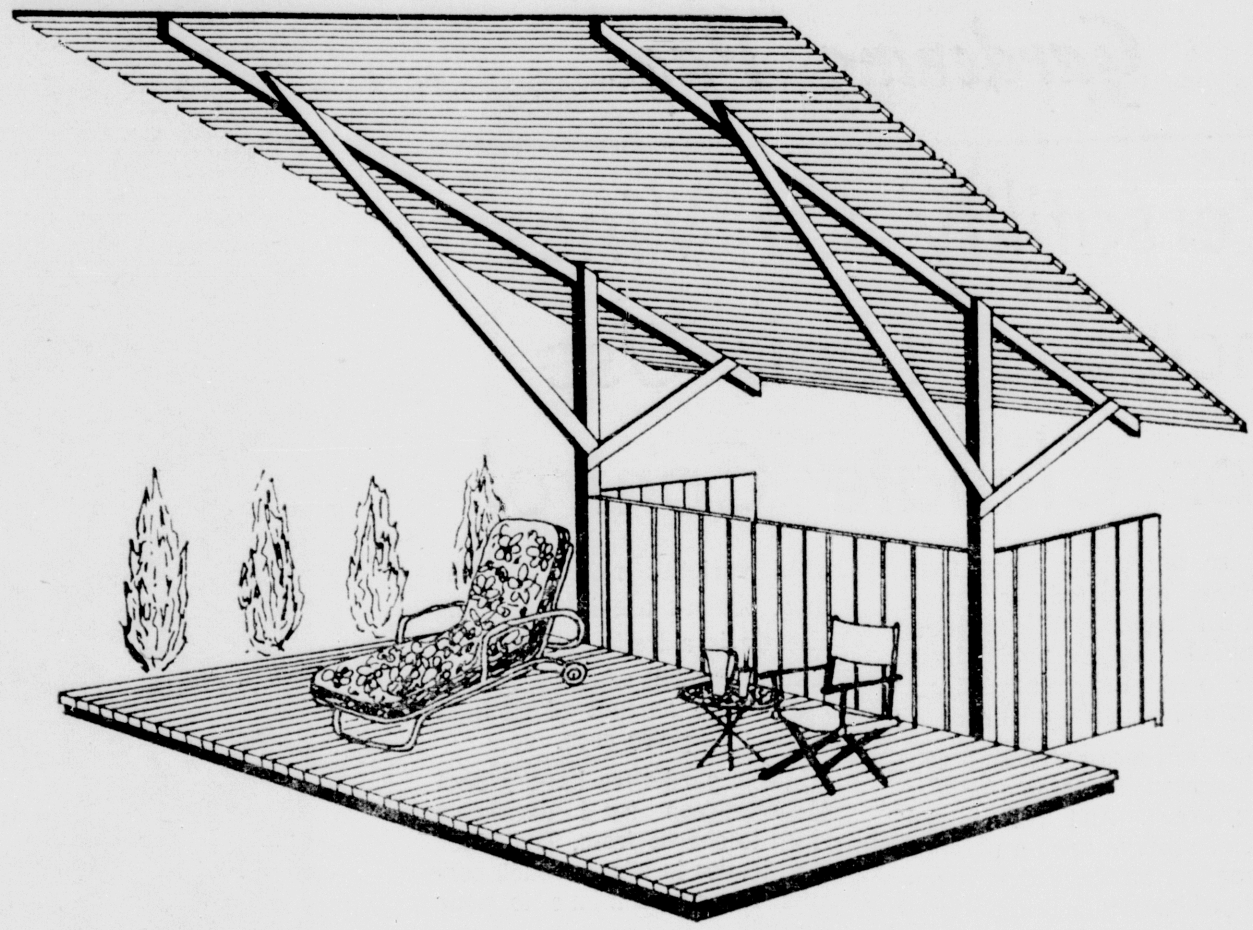
Decide which direction you'd prefer to run the deck boards, and your support stringers will be laid the opposite way. Four-foot intervals are adequate; if two-by-six inch stringers are used, they may extend eight feet between pads.

Level stringers over concrete pads set on firm earth, and posts if needed. Nail two-by-six blocking crosswise between stringers. Space slightly the deck boards, preferable two-by-fours flat or on edge.

TO ADD THE sunscreen, position four-by-six inch posts on the back side of the deck, set in two or more feet from the edges. Fill around posts with concrete to increase rigidity.

Prepare two-by-four beams and braces for bolting to each post, tilting the beams to slant the screen backwards. Fasten a few one-by-two inch slats across the beams near the ends.

Then lower roof assembly to ground for easier nailing of all the slats. Space slats across the beams over the deck to filter light and butt them solid over the storage area. Roll roofing here would complete the shower proofing.



A SUNSCREEN that shades a small deck will add greatly to the utility of that outdoor living area, especially during the warm summer months. Here roof boards have been spaced over the deck so as to filter the light.

LIFT COMPLETED assembly into place and bolt to the posts. Then fence between posts and enclosing sections to either side. Fence style can be plain board, board-on-board or louvered.

For a deck close to ground, pressure-treated western lumber for stringers is advisable. The structure needs no finish to weather naturally.

But the same idea using solid boards can be used to provide weather protection for an outdoor storage area. The fence that will hide toys, small vehicles, power mower, etc., can be made board-on-board, louvered or some other fencing design.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, says the American Iron and Steel Institute, you can nail into steel as readily as wood. Here a carpenter nails plywood subflooring directly to a steel floor joist. Versatile, factory-fabricated steel components are figuring more and more in construction from structural framing to roof shingles. And you can even hang pictures or heavy mirrors on screws inserted directly into steel studs.

Tree Roots In Pipe? Here's What To Do

Big, healthy trees are nice to have around your home, not only because of the natural beauty they lend to the landscape but also because they help to prevent soil erosion.

However, the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau points out, they can create a real problem when their thirsty roots get into your pipe.

TREE ROOTS are strong because they have a deep instinct to live. They spread in all directions, seeking out life-giving moisture. If there's a leak or a break in your underground pipe, they'll find it.

Then, before you know it, your pipe becomes clogged, requiring corrective measures.

The most effective way of dealing with the problem calls for the tools and services of a plumbing contractor. He'll use a special flexible auger that can be reeled into the pipeline, cutting away all growth. This definitely is not a job for an amateur, since improper use of the auger can break the pipe and worsen your problem.

SPECIAL ROOT solvents also can be flushed through the line to clear it.

These corrective measures are only temporary, however, since the thirsty roots soon will find their way back into the pipe. The only sure way to avoid a root problem is to make certain the pipe is of top-quality, water-tight material. Strong as tree roots are, they can't break into good-quality pipe.

When it comes to your pipeline, quality doesn't cost — it pays!

A Brochure That Helps With Home Modernization

Some 17 billion dollars will be spent on home modernization this year, according to the Bureau of Building Marketing Research.

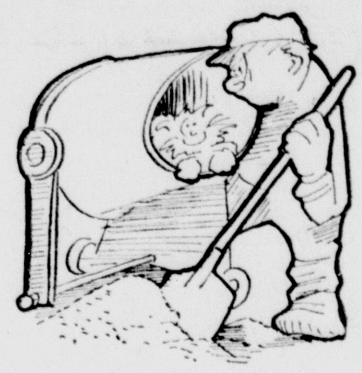
More than 15 million homeowners will do most of the work themselves, spending four billion dollars on materials. Much of the modernization will center on new and improved kitchens and bathrooms. Most popular do-it-yourself projects will be lighting fixtures, floor tiles and wall paneling.

Home owners can get help in remodeling and interior and exterior decoration in a new brochure called "New Dimensions in Living". It's available for 25 cents from the American Hardboard Association, 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill., 60606. The illustrated booklet lists uses and application methods for hardboard wall paneling, and modernization ideas for kitchens, bathrooms, living rooms, recreation rooms, additions and exterior siding.

Scratches Covered

Scratches can happen to wood paneling, but don't worry. Use a dab of furniture polish stain, applied with a soft rag. Blond polish is right for hemlock and pine, dark polish for western cedar. Rub the polish stain in, then wipe. Repeat until colors match.

Partitions For Needed Privacy



Two children occupying the same room are entitled to some privacy for work, study and play.

You can create this situation in a sizeable bedroom by installing a functional divider wall large enough to provide each child a separate study-hobby space.

Inexpensive and quite easy to intsall, the divider's structural members are two-by-four-inch lumber spaced 16-inches apart and nailed to floor and ceiling runners of the same dimension material.

To each side, the craftsman can nail sheets of prefinished perforated hardboard. The panels make a good looking backdrop and a suitable spot for hanging shelves, clock and hobby items.

On each side can be hung a working surface made by covering a rectangular framework of one-by-two-inch lumber with tempered hardboard. Cross members should be 16 inches apart.

WITH THE woodparts primed and painted and the surface shellacked or varnished, the desk provides an excellent surface for study or hobby.

Be sure the desk is anchored to the studs forming the backbone of the divider and fitted with wood supports angling into the divider at the floor.

Dividers made of lumber and hardboard can be mounted underneath. Fluorescent lighting above will illuminate the area adequately.

A Utility Board For The Kitchen

Even in the most modern kitchen, a utility board is a convenience and necessity.

A handy one, about 20 by 24 inches, can be cut from Masonite Tempered Presswood. This hardboard product is splinter-free, extremely smooth and moisture resistant.

It won't absorb odors, either, and can be cleaned easily with a damp cloth.

Such a board, with its corners rounded and edges lightly beveled with a sandblock or file, has various uses in the kitchen and about the house. Here are a few:

For rolling pie crusts.

To protect table tops from extremely hot dishes, or from being scratched by sharp cutlery.

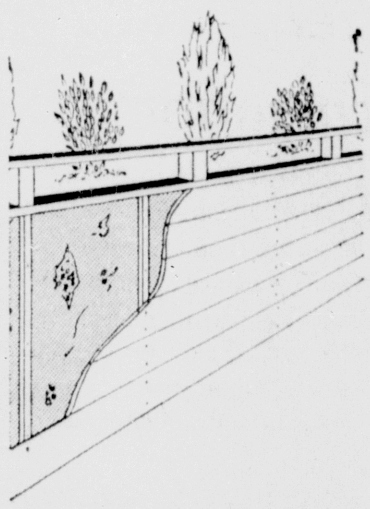
As a sandwich or salad board.

For cooling hot pies or cakes.

For a lapboard on which to write letters or jot down menus.

As a surface for cracking nuts or doing small kitchen repairs.

FACE-LIFT



CONCRETE retaining walls will take on glamor when they are faced with wood siding. Nail one-by-two inch red cedar boards to one-by-two furring strips and add a decorative cap if desired. The result: an amazing transformation.

we think you'll like the French manor house look of our new "Chandelle" collection by Century beveled glass mirror $109. ea.

six-drawer two-door triple dresser $479.

rococo headboard $189.

60½-inch high chest-on-chest $519.

Thoughtfully designed by Raymond Sobota, Chandelle typifies the kind of furniture you'll find in the country manor or larger homes of the rich noblesse or successful bourgeoisie in contrast to metropolitan or court furniture. Styling has abundant references to three centuries of French furniture designs.

You'll appreciate the rich carvings and motifs, the beauty of the heavily-distressed, carefully antiqued fruitwood finishes. Very desirable too, are painted pieces in sunny, interpretative colors.

one-drawer two-door night stand $159. ea.

75½-inch high armoire $639.

Sharing prominence in our bedroom is the Louis XV style, six-drawer, two-door 74-inch triple dresser and the rococo-influenced carved bed. You'll like the three convenient trays behind door compartment of generous sized chest-on-chest.

Chandelle also features such interesting alternate selections as the lofty armoire sketched here. Both on-leg and to-the-floor stylings are available in this beautiful collection.

Phil Silvers Misses Sgt. Ernie Bilko

By CLIVE RUSSELL
London Express Staff Reporter

LONDON—Phil Silvers swallowed a huge mouthful of cheese omelette and considered my question. "What sort of a guy am I? Well, that's a pretty tough one right now."

He paused again and then admitted: "Look, I'll level with you. I'm not being' cute about this, but the truth is I don't really known. I'm not an idiot. I've won just about every award there is in television; but I still don't know who I am.

"Basically I think I'm a decent man, but very destructive to myself. At one time I used to be the fun of the party, but for the last few years I've been too withdrawn. I'm coming out of it now, though I still don't mingle like I should."

FROM THE LIPS of a man the world remembers as the brash, irrepressible Sgt. Ernie Bilko, such self-analysis is joltingly out of character.

But the fact is that behind the lovable rubber-ball face and those memorable staccatto quips is one of nature's most distinguished melancholiacs.

At 59 Phil Silvers, quintessential American comedian, has not yet completely recovered from the untimely demise of the bouncing wheeler-dealer from Fort Baxter. Ernie Bilko, the character who made his name a household world from Sydney to Cincinnati, represented the zenith of his "show biz" career. And the slide down the other side of the hill is, he frankly admits, pretty hard to stomach.

HE TALKS SADLY about the show: "We were a happy group of guys, you know. Men get on with each other professionally so much better than women — there's no jealousy about who's got the prettiest dress.

"We were at the height of our rating when it finished. You see, it was a very expensive show and nobody policed it moneywise — the average situation comedy has five people, while we started with 24.

"The network just wasn't making enough money on it. I guess they looked at their balance sheets, saw how much it was costing them and decided to chuck it. Of course they're sorry now because they've made 500 times the money they put into it then."

BUT EVEN IF Bilko was resurrected, Silvers wouldn't return. "In show business you can't go back," he says. "I couldn't rise to it again. It would have to be an entirely new program."

Alas, there are no new programs in sight, so these days Silvers has to be content with guest appearances on television shows. It brings him a comfortable living with a palatial bachelor pad in Beverly Hills, but not the satisfaction he yearns for.

"Comedy is the toughest of the arts," he says. "If you're a singer, right now all over the world there's somebody writing something you can sing. But they ain't writing comedy.

"You've got to give the comedian a point more tolerance than the dramatic actor. When you're in a straight play and it's good, you have the assurance that the audience are there because you're a star. At the end of the show you can hear the applause, and next day you can read the reviews.

"BUT IF YOU'RE doing comedy, what assurance have you got that they're going to laugh tonight? Silence you can always buy, but not laughter. That's why most comedians, including myself, are inclined to be a little neurotic."

I asked him what makes a good comedian? "Usually, someone from a minority group," he replied. "Someone who's sensitive and aggressive at the same time.

"You've got to remember, there's a big difference between a comic and a comedian. A

PHIL SILVERS

comic is a man who stands up and tells jokes. A comedian is an actor who plays a scene.

"I'VE NEVER DONE stand-up comedy much. I'm essentially an actor. In fact, the stage is the only place I feel at home now. Phil Silvers offstage is a reserved, withdrawn man. But on the stage .... Boy, that's my cocoon."

It's almost ironic that someone who loves the live theater so much should have made his name and fortune on television.

"Yes, I guess so," Silvers agrees. "But actually I like television and I appreciate its great power. All the road and broadway shows I've done don't equal one appearance on TV.

"ANYWAY, IF I like a scene I can play it to the wall, although I do wish more of the shows were live. The gambler in me likes to take the chance that there might be a flop, that I might make a mistake.

"It's so antiseptic when you record things. You become too relaxed and too dependent on cue cards."

Modern show business is a tame affair compared to what it used to be, says Silvers. He remembers his own baptism with nostalgia.

"I was brought up in a section of Brooklyn known as murder incorporated. It was a real tough neighborhood and half the kids who went to school with me ended up in the electric chair.

"I'LL CONFESS TO you, I spent half a year in a reform school myself. Somebody said I hit a monitor on the school steps, and I was so proud of it I didn't deny it — in my neighborhood it was a badge of merit to go to reform school.

"From the age of 13 I consciously wanted to go into show-business — although nobody in my lineage had ever been backstage. I sang at the various social clubs in Brooklyn. Mostly run by gangsters, they were — and the audience used to throw money at me for tear-jerkers like 'Break the news to mother, Tell her how I love her . . . .'

"Then my voice broke and I was forced into burlesque at Minsky's On Broadway. It was a rough, spicy business and savage for comedians. The audience was there to see the girls, and to make your presence felt you had to be funny real fast.

"WE USED TO do 30 shows in a weekend, and you had to make your own material. But it made a man of me comedywise."

Silvers paused and silently reflected on the contrast between Minsky's and the orderly opulence of London's Borehamwood Studios — where he was rehearsing for a spot on the Andy Williams Show. Then he changed the subject abruptly.

"I love England, you know. It started when I was a little boy in vaudeville and I met the great British stars who came over to the states — people like Nervo and Knox, and Will Hay.

"Whenever I gave interviews in America and they asked me what my favorite city was, I'd always say London - even though I had never been there.

"THE IRONY IS that even now I've never done a live thing in Britain. I've been invited to about four Royal command performances, but always had to turn them down because they came in the middle of my shows on Broadway.

"Somebody who should know told me that that the queen used to watch the Bilko show whenever she could. I just couldn't be more thrilled at the thought."

He is also a cricket fan. "You know, a friend once took me to Lords and they made me an honorary taverner. One of the commentators there who was obviously anti-American said to me 'What do you think of our boring old game?'

"I SAID: 'LISTEN, the only boring thing around here is you. This is the most important match of the year, and you're reporting it like it was a sewing circle.'

"I gave my commentary American fashion, and you know, they used it later on the BBC. Next day the London cabbies told me they'd never enjoyed cricket so much."

He loves British policemen too, and fondly recalls a visit to Hyde Park corner during the Arab-Israeli war.

"There was this Arab speaker whipping up hatred against Israel and the Jews and getting more and more vicious with every breath. Now I'm Jewish, as you know, and I could feel myself really boiling up inside listening to this guy.

"THE CROWD WAS in a nasty mood and I was getting real frightened. Suddenly a guy in a trench-coat moved up beside me and then another fellow moved in on the other side.

"They started nudging me and I thought 'This is it.' I was just getting ready to take a swing at one of them and then make a run for it when the guy on the left whispered: 'We don't want anything to happen to Bilko, now do we?'

"They were both British detectives. My God, was I grateful?"

MARGO SANDERS has been named by Channel 38 as the hostess of their news show, "Black Log," which will make its debut on Monday at 2:15 p.m. She is a native San Franciscan who has studied radio and television at San Francisco State College. "Black Log" will feature news stories of all types — fashion, sports, the arts, and politics — which have special interest for the black community. "Black Log" will be seen four days a week, Monday through Thursday at 2:15.

Ruby Keeler's Return To Stage Brings Back Fond Memories

By JACK GAVER

NEW YORK (UPI) — The announcement that Ruby Keeler, dancing star of popular musical movies in the 1930s, is to return to the stage in the fall in a revival of 1925's "No! No! Nanette!" certainly stirs up some thoughts.

For one thing, it is a reminder that 1943's "Oklahoma!," which aroused some comment with its one exclamation point, was no pioneer in that area.

IT ALSO REMINDS one that Vincent Youmans, the "Nanette" composer who died too soon in 1946, was one of Broadway's great ones, on a par with Kern, Gershwin, Rodgers and so on. A debonaire, sophisticated fellow who knew both hits and flops.

When you hear "Tea for Two" and "I want to be Happy" that's the "Nanette" Youmans. Also his are "Great Day," and 'Time on My Hands," "Rise 'n Shine," "Sometimes I'm Happy," "Hellelujah," "More Than You Know," "Without a Song" and "Oh, How I Long to Belong to You," standouts in other shows with which he was connected.

Miss Keeler came to Broadway in the 1920s when it was not unusual for female teenagers, even in their quite early teens, to get their starts in musicals or nightclubs. A couple of others who come easily to mind are Paulette Goddard and Barbara Stanwyck.

MISS KEELER WAS 13 when she appeared in the chorus line of "The Rise of Rosie O'Reilly" in 1923. In the next few years, her looks and dancing feet earned her "name" roles in "Lucky" and "The Sidewalks of New York."

Then, in 1929, came the leading role in "Show Girl" for none less than the great Florenz Ziegfeld, and linked to that was her romance and subsequent marriage with Al Jolson, who, in his time, had a stature in show business that no one else —but no one —has ever achieved. In the next decade, Hollywood made Miss Keeler famous.

"Show Girl" — more memories there. It brought Jimmy Durante and his sidekicks, Lou Clayton and Eddie Jackson, out of the Prohibition Era nightclubs into the legitimate theater, and Durante went on from there.

THE COMPOSER of "Show Girl"? Only George Gershwin, with lyrics by brother Ira; the pair just beginning to come into the greatness that was to include "Of Thee I Sing" and "Porgy and Bess."

What else in that 1929-30 season? Helen Morgan in the Kern-Hammerstein "Sweet Adeline," a "juvenile" named Humphrey Bogart in "It's a Wise Child," George M. Cohan in his own "Gambling," Gertrude Lawrence and Leslie Howard in "Candle Light" (they don't make 'em like those any more), the aforementioned Youmans' "Great Day" (and would you believe Billy Rose as the lyricist of "Great Day"?, that wonderful "Berkeley Square" with the previously saluted Leslie Howard, Noel Coward's "Bitter Sweet" with that marvelous Evelyn Laye, a play entitled "Broken Dishes" that started Bette Davis on her way, Marc Connelly's monumental "The Green Pastures," the dynamic "The Last Mile" that sent Spencer Tracy to film fame.

There are other fond memories of that season that saw Miss Keeler become a star, but I've suffered enough in recalling the above. With apologies to Francois Villon (and Dennis King), where are the shows of yesteryear?

Marin Poets' Corner

THE BRIDE

This portal,
This pathway
Opaquely seen
Thru bright hopes,
Beckons her.

Swathed in a
Mist of white
She stands
Tremulously repeating
Age old vows.

May the echos
Of myraid joys
And countless tears
Guide her
On love's way.

NOVATO — JEAN GARIO

BIG SUR

Gazing at the wild wilderness,
The twisted oaks and winding trails,
The warm and rolling hills,
The ever churning sea,
A free and beautiful land
Untouched by man.
Existing in the breath of God.
I can talk to the wind and sea,
For they will always understand.
One doesn't live in this land—
One lives with it,
Every inch alive with nature's beauty.
My great love for this land is expressed
By its great beauty.
God, let this land stay the way it is,
A pure virgin land from man's cruel touch.
If I could describe beauty in two words,
It would be "Big Sur!"
